It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

PREFACE

THIS book is designed on the same general plan as the edition of 'Longinus on the Sublime' which was published by the Cambridge University Press in 1899. The Syndics have undertaken to issue presently, in a similar form, the Greek treatise (not hitherto edited in England) known as 'Demetrius de Elocutione'; and I hope that the three companion volumes may be followed in due time by two works of larger scope—a new critical and annotated edition of the Rhetoric of Aristotle, and a History of Greek Literary Criticism.

A common purpose underlies the series of books thus projected. Many as are the aspects under which the ancient classics have been studied, no sufficiently resolute and comprehensive effort seems yet to have been made to view Greek literature through the eyes of Greek critics. These critics have much that is common to them all: they have also much that is individual in each. In common they possess the power, which a modern can never hope fully to attain, of appreciating the most delicate shades of Greek literary expression. Their individuality is sufficiently seen in such a contrast as that presented by Dionysius and 'Longinus,' two authors admirably adapted to supplement and balance one another. Neither is entirely one-sided; but Dionysius concerns himself mainly with questions of literary form and technique, whereas 'Longinus' dwells more on that moral nobleness which he thinks he discerns in all really great literature. The former has chiefly in view the art of literature, the latter its spirit. The latter is impressed by what is elemental and unapproachable in genius; the former reminds us that great artists are also great craftsmen.

The three epistolary essays included in this volume are chiefly occupied with points of interest affecting four great Greek prose-writers: Aristotle, Demosthenes, Plato, Thucydides. All the three letters are more or less polemical, being protests (1) against a literary fiction of some indiscreet Peripatetic, who had maintained that the oratory of Demosthenes was formed upon the Rhetoric of Aristotle; (2) against an excessive admiration, and servile imitation, of the style of Plato; (3) against the adoption of a similar attitude towards the style of Thucydides. The letters are interesting, and variously suggestive, in themselves. But it is hoped that the present volume will also serve as a kind of general introduction to the entire body of extant critical work which we owe to Dionysius. In the Introductory Essay and in the Bibliography no pains have been spared to give full information, and abundant references, with the view of shedding light on all the literary essays of Dionysius; and in the Notes and Glossary a like effort has been made to illustrate his literary opinions and technical language by means of quotations from himself and other Greek critics. The task has been one of some difficulty, since no general introduction of the sort here offered exists either at home or abroad and no English translation of any of the literary essays of Dionysius has so far appeared. The difficulty of finding suitable English equivalents for the technical terms of Greek literary criticism is, indeed, far greater than any who have not essayed the task of translation could well imagine. I have, however, derived much incidental help, in this and other ways, from Sir Richard Jebb's Attic Orators and Dr J. E. Sandys' Orator of Cicero, both of which books bear witness to an intimate knowledge of the critical writings of Dionysius. In textual matters I am much indebted to the work of Herwerden, Weil, Usener and Radermacher; but in constituting my own text I have striven throughout to exercise an independent judgment, and have specially collated (for the purposes of this edition) the important Paris MS. 1741. In the revision of the proof-sheets I have had most valuable help from my friends Mr G. B. Mathews, Mr W. H. D. Rouse, and Mr W. J. Woodhouse. Nor must I omit to mention the care and acuteness which the Readers of the University Press have once more shown in the discharge of their exacting duties.

Some not unfavourable critics of 'Longinus on the Sublime' have suggested that the edition would have been better if somewhat differently planned. A Quarterly Reviewer, whose own studies have clearly lain rather in the direction of English literature than of the Greek and Latin classics, thinks that more space should have been allotted to an estimate of the modern influence of the treatise. This may be so or not; it is one of those questions of proportion on which views will always differ. The same writer further thinks that the evidence in favour of the traditional attribution of the book to Longinus should have been more fully stated. This, again, is a colourable criticism, though it must be noted that the critic is himself apparently unable to add anything to the well-worn arguments (accessible to all) by which the old view was supported. It is, however, a subject of real regret to me that the reviewer, deserting matters of opinion for matters of fact, should have gone on to say that some of the omissions he notices 'are no doubt to be attributed to the restrictions which have, as we understand, been placed on him [the editor] by his publishers.' It is due to the Syndics of the Cambridge University Press to state that my volume was accepted by them exactly as it stood, and that for any shortcomings in it I am alone responsible. This misstatement of fact finds, I am glad to reflect, no warrant in anything said within the book itself.

In this edition, as in its predecessor, Greek text and English translation have been placed on facing pages, and the necessary explanatory matter has been thrown into the shape of Notes and Glossary and given in the latter part of the volume. This arrangement seems calculated to meet the wishes of any men of letters who may be led to read the book out of interest rather in the authors whom Dionysius elucidates than in Dionysius himself. Such readers, we cannot doubt, would be entirely to the mind of Dionysius. It is said that Richard Porson once remarked that he would be 'quite content if, three hundred years after his time, it should be said that one Porson lived towards the close of the eighteenth century, who did a good deal for the text of Euripides.' These words show at once the modesty and the pride of the true scholar. Dionysius also was a true scholar in his way, but his aims were more ambitious. His own chief desire probably was that, in days to come, it should be said that there lived (in the age of Caesar Augustus) a historian, born in the same Greek town as Herodotus, who had told once for all the tale of the origin and growth of the great Roman power. But should this claim be disallowed, he would then, we may feel sure, wish to be remembered as a scholar who had contributed something to the knowledge and appreciation of the literature of Greece.

It is, doubtless, chiefly through the influence of modern men of letters that Dionysius has been able to transmit some share of the Greek spirit to our day. An editor who happens to be dating from the native county of Tennyson not unnaturally recalls some words which early in the past century were addressed to James Spedding: 'You ask me what I have been doing. I have written several things since I saw you, some emulation of the "ἦδὺ καὶ βραχὺ καὶ μεγαλοπρεπές" of Alcaeus, others of the "ἐκλογή τῶν ὀνομάτων καὶ τῆς συνθέσεως ἀκρίβεια" of Simonides.' The Greek expressions in inverted commas are quoted by Tennyson from the De Vet. Script. Censura of Dionysius. It is a remarkable illustration of the lasting influence of Greek literature that the representative poet of the age of Victoria should have been thus shaping his genius under the guidance of the literary critic of Augustan Rome. The experience of recent years encourages the hope that, in the century now dawning, many important discoveries will be made which will gladden the heart of the classical student and lift a little higher the curtain that hangs between him and the ancient world. But for England at large no more ennobling revelation of antiquity could be desired than the life-work of yet another great poet who, while true to the best instincts of the English race, shall be Roman in his reverence for law and Greek in his love of beauty.

DIONYSIUS OF HALICARNASSUS

AS A

LITERARY CRITIC.

THE Three Literary Letters printed and translated in this volume cannot be fully understood, nor will they convey a true impression of the merits of Dionysius as a critic, unless they are viewed in connexion with the life and general literary activities of their author. Accordingly an endeavour will be made, in the following pages, to give some account of the literary work accomplished by Dionysius in the course of his laborious career, and his aims and efforts will, so far as it is possible, be described in his own words.

I. LIFE.

The birthplace of Dionysius is known, but not the year of his birth or death. Early in his own History he mentions the fact that he was the son of Alexander and a native of Halicarnassus<sup>1</sup>. Strabo, a contemporary, gives similar testimony, enumerating among the distinguished townsmen of Halicarnassus 'Herodotus the historian; Heracleitus, the poet and friend of Callimachus; and in our own times, the historian Dionysius<sup>2</sup>.' The active years of the life of

Dionysius were passed at Rome; and with regard to these years another statement of his own is our principal authority. 'I took ship,' he says, 'to Italy at the time when the Civil War was brought to an end by Augustus Caesar, in the middle of the 187th Olympiad, and I have spent in Rome the twenty-two years which have elapsed between that time and this. I learnt the Latin language and made myself familiar with the national records, and during the whole of the time I have continued to occupy myself with the materials bearing upon my subject. Before beginning to write I gathered information, partly from the lips of the most learned men with whom I came into contact, and partly from histories written by Romans of whom they spoke with praise<sup>1</sup>.'

The two-and-twenty years thus indicated are those from 30 B.C. to 8 B.C. The year of Dionysius' birth may therefore, in view of this passage and of certain other references in the History, be placed conjecturally between 60 and 55 B.C. As regards the date of his death nothing can be affirmed except the obvious fact that it cannot have been an earlier year than 8 B.C. His calling at Rome was that of a teacher of rhetoric. This is shown not only by the general character of his writings, but by his promise in the De Compositione Verborum to explain (to the young Melitius Rufus to whom he addresses the treatise) certain points of detail 'in our daily lessons<sup>2</sup>.' Among his friends he must, as his writings show, have numbered not only Melitius Rufus the elder, but Ammaeus, Gnaeus Pompeius Geminus, and Q. Ælius Tubero.

II. ANTIQUITATES ROMANAE.

The 'Ρωμαϊκὴ Ἀρχαιολογία (or, Antiquitates Romanae) of Dionysius was, as the name implies, an account of the Early History of Rome. It was written in twenty books (of which the first nine survive in their integrity, the tenth and eleventh in great part, the rest only in fragments), and carried the narrative from legendary times down to the year 264 B.C.<sup>1</sup>. The work was, therefore, designed to cover the period left untouched by Polybius. It was also intended as a thank-offering for the manifold favours which Dionysius had enjoyed during his prolonged residence in Rome<sup>2</sup>. In preparing his work, the author drew from good sources, as he has himself told us<sup>3</sup>. Notwithstanding all his praiseworthy industry, however, he writes history in the spirit of a Greek rhetorician. It would have been well for his fame as a historian if his qualifications had been such as those of Polybius, of whom on grounds of style he speaks slightly, classing him in poor company. 'In later times the art of composition was utterly neglected. No one thought that it was necessary, or that it contributed anything to beauty of style. Consequently writers left behind them volumes which no one can bring himself to read right to the end. Cases in point are Phylarchus, Duris, Polybius, Psaon, Demetrius of Calantis, Hieronymus, Antiochus, Heracleides, Hegesias of Magnesia, and countless others, whose names a whole day would scarcely suffice to tell<sup>1</sup>. Dionysius was hardly wrong in holding that historians, no less than other writers, owe the duty of style alike to their readers and their subject. It is his misfortune that he falls short himself in even weightier matters. For if the choice must be made and a history cannot unite various excellences, then far superior to style, to erudition, to the panegyrist's desire to please or the moralist's desire to instruct, is the mind which can seize the great facts of national life and the character which can record them without fear or favour.

III. SCRIPTA RHETORICA. PROBABLE ORDER IN WHICH THEY WERE WRITTEN. LOST WRITINGS.

Dionysius himself undoubtedly regarded the Archaeologia as the great achievement of his life. Since the reawakening of historical criticism in the earlier decades of the past century, the modern world has agreed to value it only so far as it reproduces Roman authorities now lost, or records legends and primitive observances the key to which has since been sought by scientific inquirers. So that, by one of those curious ironies not uncommon in the history of letters, Dionysius is now chiefly remembered by his shorter writings. He is one of those historians who owe such fame as they possess not so much to their more ambitious efforts as to what they would themselves unquestionably have considered their minor works and more ephemeral essays.

The shorter writings of Dionysius are traditionally known under the title Scripta Rhetorica. This title it is well to retain, if only as a reminder that, whenever we speak of Dionysius as a literary critic, we are speaking of one who was, first and foremost, a teacher of rhetoric. At the same time, if an English title general enough to cover the various essays in question must be suggested, 'literary criticism' (a term of wide application) is probably a more appropriate heading than 'rhetorical writings.' Of purely technical rhetoric Dionysius has left us but little. The Ars Rhetorica is no longer held to be his work, though it may possibly contain fragments of his doctrine<sup>1</sup>. The treatise on the Arrangement of Words contains much that is technical, but much also that may fairly be described as literary criticism. The general character of this treatise, and of the other Scripta Rhetorica of Dionysius, will appear more clearly from the description to be given later.

The approximate order in which the 'rhetorical' writings of Dionysius were written may be conjectured from the numerous references which, in the course of them, he makes from one to another. He never wearies of telling his readers that this matter or the other has been, or is being, or will be treated in a séparate work<sup>2</sup>. But singularly enough, he lets fall no hint as to whether his History preceded, or followed, his Critical Works. Nevertheless, though the rhetorician never refers to the historian and the historian never refers to the rhetorician, it is likely that most of the rhetorical writings of Dionysius were composed at intervals during the two-and-twenty years of which the Archaeologia was, in his own view, the principal fruit. The sequence of these writings among themselves must have been somewhat as follows :—

1. Epistula ad Ammaeum I.
2. De Compositione Verborum.
3. De Antiquis Oratoribus: Iudicia de Lysia, etc.
4. De admiranda vi dicendi in Demosthene.
5. De Imitatione Libri I, II.
6. Epistula ad Cn. Pompeium.
7. De Imitatione Liber III.
8. De Dinarcho.
9. De Thucydide.
10. Epistula ad Ammaeum II.

A few examples will show the sort of evidence available for determining not the exact date (that being unknown in every case) but the approximate sequence of these writings. In the opening chapter of the Second Letter to Ammaeus, the essays on the Ancient Orators are described as earlier productions than the comparatively recent treatise on Thucydides, from which a long extract is given in the second chapter. Similarly in the third chapter of the Letter to Gnaeus Pompeius there is an important allusion to the three books On Imitation, from the second of which an extended quotation is made. In the second chapter of the same Letter a passage is reproduced from the treatise on the Attic Orators<sup>1</sup>. An interesting question is raised by this last reference. Does Dionysius mean us to understand that the De admir. vi dicendi in Demosthene, which is the work in question, belongs to the same series (περὶ τῶν Ἀττικῶν ῥητόρων ad Pomp. c. 2 init., or περὶ τῶν ἀρχαίων ῥητόρων ad Amm. II. c. 1 init.) as the De Lysia, De Isocrate, De Isaeo? It may be so, since Demosthenes was certainly one of the six Attic orators included by Dionysius in that series<sup>2</sup>. But the separate entry given above is convenient as marking the fact that this essay stands apart from the others alike in elaboration and incompleteness<sup>1</sup>. It seems a likely inference from the various statements of Dionysius that he wrote on Demosthenes (and indeed on Lysias and the other lesser orators) at different times and from many different points of view, not only analysing their style but discussing such points as the genuineness or spuriousness of the speeches commonly attributed to them. In the De adm. vi dic. in Dem. c. 32 he seems to promise to publish a set comparison between the style of Demosthenes and that of Plato, in order to establish the superiority of the former<sup>2</sup>. If he carried out his intention, the work has been lost. Other missing books are the περὶ τῆς ἐκλογῆς τῶν ὀνομάτων promised 'for next year' (εἰς νέετα, de Comp. c. 1); the ὑπὲρ τῆς πολιτικῆς φιλοσοφίας (de Thucyd. c. 2); the περὶ τῶν σχημάτων (Quintil. Inst. Or. ix. 89); and the three books of the De Imitatione, which treatise appears as a matter of convenience in the list given above<sup>3</sup>.

κρίνομεν. Cp. de Antig. Orat., proem., ad fin. : ἔσονται δὲ οἱ παραλαμβανόμενοι ῥήτορες τρεῖς μὲν ἐκ τῶν πρεσβυτέρων, Λυσίας Ἰσοκράτης Ἰσαῖος, τρεῖς δ' ἐκ τῶν ἐπακμασάντων τούτοις, Δημοσθένης Ἐπερίδης Αἰσχίνης, οὓς ἐγὼ τῶν ἄλλων ἡγοῦμαι κρατίστους, καὶ διαιρεθήσεται μὲν εἰς δύο συντάξεις ἡ πραγματεία, τὴν δὲ ἀρχὴν ἀπὸ ταύτης λήψεται τῆς ὑπὲρ τῶν πρεσβυτέρων γραφείσης. de Isaeo c. 20 fin., ἑτέραν δὲ ἀρχὴν ποιήσομαι τοῦ λόγου περὶ τε Δημοσθένους καὶ Ἐπερίδου καὶ τρίτου λέγων Αἰσχίνου. ἡ γὰρ δὴ τελειωτάτη ῥητορικὴ καὶ τὸ κράτος τῶν ἐναγωνίων λόγων ἐν τούτοις τοῖς ἀνδράσιν ἔοικεν εἶναι.

<sup>1</sup> It deals only (though very fully) with ἡ λεκτικὴ Δημοσθένους δεινότης, or the oratorical power of Demosthenes' style, as distinguished from ἡ πραγματικὴ Δημοσθένους δεινότης, or his skill in handling subject-matter; the part treating of the latter division of the subject is not extant. The title Περὶ τῆς λεκτικῆς Δημοσθένους δεινότητος (De admiranda vi dicendi in Demosthene) is due to Sylburg.

IV. SEPARATE WORKS OF LITERARY CRITICISM.

(1) De Compositione Verborum.

It is not intended to keep closely to any conjectured order of time in the following brief description of the extant critical writings of Dionysius. The treatise De Compositione Verborum, which it is convenient to take first because of its able exposition of many of the most important rhetorical or literary principles of Dionysius, is on any reckoning probably later than the First Letter to Ammaeus, and is hardly the production of a very young man. It has, indeed, been thought that Dionysius speaks like an unmistakably old man when, in the first chapter of the De Compositione, he makes a promise with the proviso "if heaven keeps us safe and sound<sup>1</sup>." But this expression is probably one of simple piety only, and as such it has a parallel in another of the writings of Dionysius<sup>2</sup>. And in any case the treatise is earlier (though probably only shortly so) than the De admir. vi dic. in Demosth., which contains more than one reference to it<sup>3</sup>.

The De Compositione was an offering from Dionysius to his pupil Melitius Rufus, who was celebrating his first birthday after entering on man's estate. The Greek title of the book is περὶ συνθέσεως ὀνομάτων, On the Arrangement of Words<sup>4</sup>.

<sup>4</sup> The full title is indicated in De admir. vi dic. in Demosth. c. 49 (as quoted in the preceding note), τοὺς ὑπομνηματισμοὺς...οὓς περὶ τῆς συνθέσεως τῶν ὀνομάτων πεπραγματεύμεθα. The best English and French equivalent of σύνθεσις would be composition, if the word had not so wide a range. As it is, arrangement or order

Dionysius starts with the proposition that, in the practice of eloquence, there are two things to be considered, the ideas (νοήματα) and the words (ὀνόματα) used to express them; or, to put the same thing in another way, there is the sphere of subject-matter (ὁ πραγματικὸς τόπος), and the sphere of expression (ὁ λεκτικὸς τόπος). The latter of the two divisions is more within the reach of 'beardless striplings' (ἀγενεῖων καὶ μεираκίων, de Comp. c. 1), who pursue it with eager enthusiasm, than the former, which demands the maturity of a riper age. A complete treatment of the λεκτικὸς τόπος will embrace not only the arrangement but the choice of words, and a book on this latter aspect of the subject is promised for the succeeding year (c. 1)<sup>1</sup>. Taken together, ἐκλογὴ and σύνθεσις are thus intended to teach the great secret of the use of the right word in the right place. Dionysius is not only a preceptor who advocates the choice of the 'mot propre,' but also one who

'D'un mot mis en sa place enseigne le pouvoir.'

In fact, he attaches greater importance to the latter requisite than to the former. "Although the choice of words stands first in the natural order, yet their due arrangement contributes far more decidedly to pleasure, persuasion and oratorical force<sup>2</sup>." The functions of the art of arrangement are, "to place the words in the right order, to assign the in English, and arrangement or disposition in French, must serve. In Latin allocatio (cp. Cic. de Orat. iii. 171) might be used, as well as compositio.

<sup>1</sup> From the De Comp. Verb., considered in connexion with his other undisputed works, it is clear that Dionysius has in mind the following divisions and subdivisions:

- A. ὁ πραγματικὸς τόπος.
  - I. εὐρεσις. κρίσις.
  - II. οἰκονομία.
- B. ὁ λεκτικὸς τόπος.
  - I. ἡ ἐκλογὴ τῶν ὀνομάτων.
    - (1) κυρία φράσις.
    - (2) τροπικὴ κατασκευή.
  - II. ἡ σύνθεσις τῶν ὀνομάτων.

fitting 'harmony' to the members of the sentence, and to divide the discourse into the proper periods<sup>1</sup>. It is to be noted that Dionysius does not, in our treatise, redeem his promise to treat of the proper employment of periods and of the due division of discourse into them. The diction used to express our thoughts is of two kinds, verse and prose; it is subject to metre or independent of it<sup>2</sup>. The importance, both in prose and in poetry, of the art of arrangement is illustrated by Dionysius (c. 3) from Homer and Herodotus. The passage chosen from Homer is that of the Odyssey (xvi. 1—16) in which Odysseus as the guest of the swineherd is (after the ancient fashion) about to break his fast at dawn, when Telemachus appears in sight returning from his sojourn in the Peloponnese. The incidents themselves are, says Dionysius, "the simple and insignificant occurrences of everyday life, but they are admirably described.....The words charm and bewitch the ear....And yet they are [and this tends to show that composition is even more important than diction] the humblest and most ordinary words imaginable, such as might be used off-hand by a farmer, or a fisherman, or an artisan, or anybody else who is careless about elegant speech<sup>3</sup>." The passage quoted from Herodotus is that (Herod. i. 8—10) in which Candaules, the Lydian king, conceives the strange desire of revealing his wife disrobed to the eyes of his friend Gyges, the better to convince him of her beauty.

The theme, as Dionysius remarks, is an ignoble and even a hazardous one. But it has, he adds, been treated most happily, and the narrative is better than the occurrence. This result is, we are told, due not to the words, which are ordinary words taken as they come, but to the skill with which they are arranged<sup>1</sup>.

Still confining himself to Homer and Herodotus, Dionysius (c. 4) makes some daring experiments with the poetry of the former. Homer uses, he says, the complete heroic metre of six feet, which is scanned by dactyls<sup>2</sup>. Some of these hexameters are forthwith transmuted into two varieties of tetrameters, with consequences which are as disastrous as they are meant to be. From Herodotus he takes the following passage (Herod. i. 6), quoting it in the Attic dialect thus:—

Κροῖσος ἦν Λυδὸς μὲν γένος, παῖς δὲ Ἀλυάττου, τύραννος δὲ ἐθνῶν τῶν ἐντὸς Ἀλυοῦ ποταμοῦ· ὅς, ῥέων ἀπὸ μεσημβρίας μεταξὺ Σύρων τε καὶ Παφλαγόνων, ἐξίησι πρὸς βορέαν ἀνεμον εἰς τὸν Εὐξείνιον καλούμενον πόντον.

“I change the ‘harmony’ of this passage,” says Dionysius, “and I shall find before me no longer an alluring and historical style, but rather one that is direct and vehement<sup>3</sup>.” He then rewrites the words as follows:—

Κροῖσος ἦν υἱὸς μὲν Ἀλυάττου, γένος δὲ Λυδός, τύραννος δὲ

<sup>1</sup> In transcribing the passage from Herodotus, Dionysius has turned it into Attic, “in order that no one may suppose that it is the dialect that gives the narrative its charm” (ἵνα μή τις ὑπολάβῃ τὴν διάλεκτον εἶναι τῆς ἡδονῆς αἰτίαν τῇ λέξει, c. 3). The truth seems to be that, in this instance, the charm lies not so much in the dialect, or indeed in the vaunted σύνθεσις itself, as in the attitude of the writer's mind as revealed in the entire narrative, style being interesting (here if anywhere) as the revelation of personality. It has been well said that “in all the greatest sculpture there breathes the unshamed and innocent surprise of a child just waked from sleep” (Jebb, Attic Orators, i. p. xcvi). So with Herodotus and this passage of his History. If we are to employ modern terms, we may well speak of the naïveté of the author, but we should strike a false note if we were tempted to speak of this story of his as risqué, even though Dionysius, living in a self-conscious age, does describe it as ἐπικίνδυνον (the word rendered ‘hazardous’ above).

τῶν ἐντὸς Ἄλως ποταμοῦ ἔθνων· ὅς, ἀπὸ μεσημβρίας ῥέων μεταξὺ Σύρων καὶ Παφλαγόνων, εἰς τὸν Εὐξείνιον καλούμενον πόντον ἐκδίδωσι πρὸς βορέαν ἄνεμον.

"This style," he proceeds, "would seem not to differ widely from that of Thucydides (Thucyd. i. 24) in the words: 'Ἐπίδαμιός ἐστι πόλις ἐν δεξιᾷ εἰσπλέοντι τὸν Ἰόνιον κόλπον· προσοικοῦσι δὲ αὐτὴν Ταυλάντιοι βάρβαροι, Ἰλλυρικὸν ἔθνος.'"

Dionysius now recasts the passage of Herodotus in another way. "Again I will change the same passage, and give a new form to it as follows:—

Ἄλυάττου μὲν υἱὸς ἦν Κροῖσος, γένος δὲ Λυδός, τῶν ἐντὸς Ἄλως ποταμοῦ τύραννος ἔθνων· ὅς, ἀπὸ μεσημβρίας ῥέων Σύρων τε καὶ Παφλαγόνων μεταξὺ, πρὸς βορέαν ἔξεισιν ἄνεμον εἰς τὸν καλούμενον πόντον Εὐξείνιον."

This is taken to represent the mincing, common, and effeminate manner in which Hegesias arranges his sentences, of which the following actual specimens are given: "ἐξ ἀγαθῆς ἑορτῆς ἀγαθὴν ἄγομεν ἄλλην."—"ἀπὸ Μαγνησίας εἰμὶ τῆς μεγάλης Σιτυλεύς."—"οὐ γὰρ μικρὰν εἰς Θηβαίων ὕδωρ ἔπτυσεν ὁ Διόνυσος· ἡδὺς μὲν γάρ ἐστι, ποιεῖ δὲ μαίνεσθαι." As will be seen more clearly later, Hegesias is the pet aversion of Dionysius, to whose mind he represents Asianism in its most odious form.

The praises of arrangement are (c. 4) summed up in a happy comparison. Dionysius likens this invaluable art to the magic transforming power of the Homeric Athênê, who could at will present Odysseus to the view in the guise of a beggar or as a princely warrior.

His general introduction thus completed, Dionysius takes up, more specifically, such points as the order in which the various parts of speech naturally come in a sentence (c. 5). He admits that he had been inclined to entertain a priori views on the question of grammatical rules, holding that nouns should precede verbs, verbs adverbs, and so on<sup>1</sup>. But he had proceeded, with that sound practical judgment which distinguishes him, to test his theories in the light of Homer's usage. He had then found them wanting. "Trial made shipwreck of them all, and showed their utter worthlessness<sup>1</sup>." In the chapters which follow (cc. 6—9) he discusses some details connected with the proper handling of words and clauses, and with the employment of figures of thought. Incidentally he remarks how the pathos of a passage in the speech of the Plataeans (Thucyd. iii. 57) would vanish if instead of "ὑμεῖς τε, ὦ Λακεδαιμόνιοι, ἡ μόνη ἐλπίς, δέδιμεν μὴ οὐ βέβαιοι ᾗτε" we were to read "ὑμεῖς τε, ὦ Λακεδαιμόνιοι, δέδιμεν μὴ οὐ βέβαιοι ᾗτε, ἡ μόνη ἐλπίς." So with a sentence of Demosthenes (de Cor. 119): "τὸ λαβεῖν οὖν τὰ διδόμενα ὁμολογῶν ἔννομον εἶναι, τὸ τούτων χάριν ἀποδοῦναι παρανόμων γράφει." Let the object, in each clause, be placed not first but last, and the trenchant vigour appropriate to the law-courts disappears: "ὁμολογῶν οὖν ἔννομον εἶναι τὸ λαβεῖν τὰ διδόμενα, παρανόμων γράφει τὸ τούτων χάριν ἀποδοῦναι."

Chapters 10—20 treat of nobility (τὸ καλόν<sup>2</sup>) and charm (ἡ ἡδονή<sup>3</sup>) in style, and of the means by which these qualities may be attained. When nobility and charm are found united in good writing, the ear is satisfied, just as is the eye when it discerns these qualities in a picture or a statue; the eye is then content and desires nothing more. The two qualities are not, however, always found in combination. The style of Thucydides and of Antiphon is eminently noble, but it is not charming<sup>3</sup>. The style of Ctesias and of Xenophon is charming in the highest degree, but not as noble as it should have been. The composition (σύνθεσις) of Herodotus unites both these qualities; it is at once noble and charming (c. 10).

Charm and nobility are themselves, in Dionysius' judgment, chiefly due to four things: melody, rhythm, variety, and the propriety which attends these three<sup>3</sup>. Susceptibility to harmonious sounds may be regarded as a sort of human instinct:—

“Who is there that is not attracted and enthralled by one melody, while he remains entirely unaffected by another,—that is not captivated by this rhythm, but offended by that? Ere now in popular houses of entertainment, thronged by a mixed and uncultured multitude, I have seemed to observe that all of us have a sort of natural appreciation for good melody and good rhythm. I have seen an accomplished harpist, of high repute, hissed by the assembled public because he struck a single wrong note and so spoiled the melody. I have seen, too, a flute-player, who handled his instrument with the practised skill of a master, suffer the same fate because he blew faultily or, through not compressing his lips, produced a harsh sound or so-called ‘broken note’ as he played. Nevertheless, if the amateur critic were bidden to take up the instrument and himself to render any of the pieces with whose performance by professionals he found fault, he would be unable to do it. Why so? Because this is an affair of skill, in which we are not all partakers; the other of feeling, which is nature’s universal gift to man. I have noticed the same thing occur in the case of rhythms. Everybody chafes and fumes when a performer strikes an instrument, takes a step, or sings a note, out of time, and so destroys the rhythm<sup>1</sup>.”

Now the difference between music and oratory, Dionysius proceeds to say, is simply one of quantity, not of quality. The speaking voice is confined to a narrower compass of notes than is the singing voice, and does not observe intervals less than the semitone. In fact, the speaking voice is melodious, but it is not melody; it is rhythmical, but it is not rhythm (εὐμελής...ἐμμελής, εὐρυθμος...ἔνρυθμος).—The question of variety (μεταβολή) is treated next. Variety will be aided by a large vocabulary, one which does not disdain common words. "There is, I maintain, no part of speech (used to denote any thing or person) so low, or sordid, or coarse, or otherwise obnoxious, that it will find no fit place in literature. My advice is to bring out such words in composition with a bold and manly confidence, in accordance with the practice of Homer, in whose poems the commonest words are found<sup>1</sup>." A knowledge of the nature and powers of the letters of the alphabet (γράμματα) will also contribute to variety of style (c. 14). To illustrate his point, Dionysius enters upon a detailed and highly technical exposition, based upon the phonetics of his time. He gives the divisions into vowels (φωνήεντα, φωναί) and consonants (ψόφοι); semi-vowels (ἡμίφωνα) and mutes (ἄφωνα); short vowels (βραχέα), long (μακρά), and common (δίχρονα); aspirated consonants (δασέα), unaspirated (ψιλά), and common or medial (κοινά, μέσα). About individual letters many interesting remarks are made. The euphony (τὸ εὐφωνον, τὸ εὐηχον) of the vowels is, in descending order, as follows: a, η, ω, υ, ι. The method of producing these vowels is described with some minuteness. Among the consonants, λ and ρ are warmly commended, while σ is stigmatised as "a graceless and disagreeable letter, and one which is decidedly offensive if used too often. Sibilation seems better to suit a wild beast's utterance than that of a rational being. Accordingly, some of the ancients used it sparingly and guardedly. There are, indeed, cases in which entire odes have been composed without a single sigma<sup>2</sup>."

Passing a little later (c. 17) to the various rhythms, Dionysius distinguishes the following varieties of metrical feet (πόδες, ῥυθμοί):—

δισύλλαβοι	τρισύλλαβοι
υ υ ἡγεμών, πυρρίχιος	υ υ υ χορεῖος, τρίβραχος
— — σπονδεῖος	— — — μολοττός
υ — ἱαμβος	υ — υ ἀμφίβραχος
— υ τροχαῖος	υ υ — ἀνάπαιστος
	— υ υ δάκτυλος
	— υ — κρητικὸς
	— — υ βακχεῖος
	υ — — ὑποβακχεῖος

The dignity, or meanness, of each of these feet is declared and illustrated<sup>1</sup>.

On the general question of the illustrations employed by Dionysius it may here be remarked that in the De Compositione he favours verse examples, while the subject-matter of the rest of his critical writings leads him more commonly to draw from prose sources. Where he quotes prose illustrations in the De Compositione, they are usually of a striking kind. In c. 18, for instance, when exemplifying the power of rhythm, he cites Thucyd. ii. 35 (οἱ μὲν πολλοὶ τῶν ἐνθάδε ἤδη εἰρηκότων ἐπαινοῦσι τὸν προσθέντα τῷ νόμῳ τὸν λόγον τόνδε, ὡς καλὸν ἐπὶ τοῖς ἐκ τῶν πολέμων θαπτομένοις ἀγορεύεσθαι αὐτόν); Plat. Menex. 236 D (ἔργῳ μὲν ἡμῖν οἶδ' ἔχουσι τὰ προσήκοντα σφίσιν αὐτοῖς, ὧν τυχόντες πορεύονται τὴν εἰμαρμένην πορείαν); and Demosth. De Cor. init. (πρῶτον μὲν, ὦ ἄνδρες Ἀθηναῖοι, τοῖς θεοῖς εὖχομαι πᾶσι καὶ πάσαις ὅσῃν εὖνοιαν ἔχων ἐγὼ διατελῶ τῇ τε καὶ ἀλόγου μᾶλλον ἢ λογικῆς ἐφάπτεσθαι δοκεῖ φωνῆς ὁ συριγμός. τῶν γοῦν παλαιῶν σπανίως ἐχρῶντό τινες αὐτῷ καὶ πεφυλαγμένως· εἰσι δὲ οἱ ἀσίγμους ᾧδᾶς ὅλας ἐποίουν. The line of the Medea (ἔσωσά σ', ὡς ἴσασιν Ἑλλήνων ὅσοι, 476) is a well-known example of reiteration of the σ in order to denote hissing hate. ζ, although a compound of σ, does not share its disfavour. It stands, according to Dionysius, for σδ (not δς: cp. συρίσδω = συρίζω, Ἀθήναζε = Ἀθήνασδε), and the σ was probably sounded as in the French 'chose' or 'douse.'

<sup>1</sup> His analysis should be compared with that given in the chapter of Aristotle (Rhet. iii. 8) which deals with the subject of rhythm. See p. 40 n. 4 infra.

ει καὶ πᾶσιν ὑμῖν τοσαύτην ὑπάρξαι μοι παρ' ὑμῶν εἰς τον τὸν ἀγῶνα).

But it is from the poets, and especially from Homer, that adduces, in this treatise, most of his proofs and illustrations. He finds (c. 16) a crowning instance of Homer's power investing even the most unpromising materials with beauty that passage of the Iliad (ii. 494 ff.) in which he enumerates the towns of Boeotia. In the same chapter he quotes, with noteworthy comments showing the zest of his enjoyment and the judiciousness of his admiration, such lines as

Similarly in c. 15 he quotes:

Nor does he omit (in c. 20) to give due honour to the famous lines of the Odyssey:—

Dionysius' felicitous comment on this line is, τῇ παρεκτάσει τῶν συλλαβῶν τὸν ὡστον ἐμφαίνειν βουλόμενος ἦχον, de Comp. c. 17.

"Does not," he asks, "the structure of the words roll downhill together with the ponderous rock, or rather does not the speed of the narration outstrip the stone's career? Methinks it does<sup>1</sup>."

The concluding part of the treatise is devoted to two principal topics: the varieties of style (cc. 12—24), and the relations of prose to verse and of verse to prose (cc. 25, 26). Of style (or more strictly, of modes of composition) there are three kinds: the austere (αὐστηρὰ ἁρμονία, αὐστηρὰ σύνθεσις), the smooth or florid (γλαφυρὰ ἢ ἀνθηρά), and the middle (κοινή)<sup>2</sup>. The different styles are characterised at some length and their chief representatives named. Among the representatives of the austere style are Antimachus of Colophon and Empedocles in epic poetry, Pindar in lyric poetry, Aeschylus in tragedy, Thucydides in history, Antiphon in oratory (c. 22)<sup>3</sup>. The smooth or florid style is represented by Hesiod, Sappho, Anacreon, Simonides, Euripides, Ephorus, Theopompus, Isocrates. The actual examples of this style are drawn from Isocrates and Sappho, and it is in this connexion that Dionysius cites the latter's Hymn to Aphrodite (c. 23). The middle style unites the excellences of the two others. Its representatives are: Homer, Stesichorus, Alcaeus, Sophocles, Herodotus, Democritus, Plato, Aristotle, Demosthenes (c. 24).

<sup>2</sup> "The three ἁρμονίαι, or styles of composition, distinguished by Dionysius, must not be confused with the three λέξεις, or styles of diction, which he distinguishes in his essay on Demosthenes, cc. 1—3. The ἁρμονίαι refer, of course, to the putting together of words; the λέξεις, to the choice of words. As to λέξεις, Dionysius recognises (1) an elaborate diction, which employs farfetched and unusual words, ἐξηλλαγμένη, περιττὴ λέξις, of which Thucydides is the great example: (2) a smooth and plain diction, λιτὴ, ἀφελὴς λέξις, best represented by Lysias: (3) a mixed diction, μικτὴ καὶ σύνθετος λέξις, of which the type is Isocrates." Jebb, Attic Orators, i. 21 n. 4.

During his discussion, in c. 25, of the relations between poetry and prose Dionysius proclaims himself, in a curious and characteristic way, the hierophant of mysteries no less sacred and hidden than those of Eleusis. "These matters resemble mysteries, and cannot be divulged to the crowd. I should not, therefore, be guilty of impertinence were I to invite those only who are initiated to approach the rites of style, while bidding the profane close the gates of their ears<sup>1</sup>." He then expounds the important principle that prose should be metrical, rhythmical and melodious, and yet not be metre, rhythm, or poem. In the last chapter (c. 26) he treats the converse question how a poem or ode can resemble fine prose. Variety is hampered in poetry by the requirements of metre; this is particularly the case in heroic and iambic poetry. Lyric poetry has greater freedom, as may be seen in Simonides' Ode on Danae, which Dionysius transcribes and thus preserves (together with the wonderful poem of Sappho which he has previously quoted) for future ages.

(2) De Oratoribus Antiquis.—De admiranda vi dicendi in Demosthenē.—De Dinarcho.

If the general principles on which the literary criticism of Dionysius rests can be most conveniently inferred from a detailed study of the De Compositione Verborum, their application is nowhere seen to greater advantage than in the various essays devoted to the leading Attic Orators. The question of the uncertain title of the De Antiquis Oratoribus or De Atticis Oratoribus, has been mentioned already<sup>2</sup>. From the passages then quoted in the notes it will also have been seen that Dionysius divided his treatise into two sections, the first including three earlier (Lysias, Isocrates, Isaeus), the second three later orators (Demosthenes, Hyperides, Aeschines). The De Lysia, De Isocrate, and De Isaeo are extant, while the De Hyperide and De Aeschine have been lost. As already stated, the extant essay on Demosthenes may, or may not belong to this series. If we could recover the lost introduction to it, we should possibly find that the essay was issued as an enlarged edition of an earlier work<sup>1</sup>. The De Dinarcho (although grouped here for convenience) undoubtedly belongs to an altogether different series<sup>2</sup>. It is well known that Dionysius was either ignorant of, or (as is more probable) ignored, the so-called 'Attic Canon' of Ten Orators.

The three essays devoted to Lysias, Isocrates, and Isaeus are modelled on an identical plan,—one which comprises a few particulars of the life of each orator, an estimate of his style (under such headings as λεκτικὸς τόπος, ἐκλογή ὀνομάτων, σύνθεσις, ἀρεταὶ τῆς λέξεως, etc.), a similar estimate of his skill in dealing with his subject-matter (the headings here being πραγματικὸς τόπος, εὔρεσις, οἰκονομία, etc.), some comparisons of one orator with another, and a number of illustrative extracts. The object of Dionysius, in the writings here under discussion, was "not to complete a set of biographies or essays, but to establish a standard for Greek prose, applicable alike to oratory and to every other branch of composition. He considers the orators, accordingly, less as individual writers than as representatives of tendencies. He seeks to determine their mutual relations, and, with the aid of the results thus obtained, to trace a historical development<sup>3</sup>."

Largely through the influence of the book just quoted, that portion of the literary criticism of Dionysius which gathers round the Attic Orators is better known to English students than any other. Consequently no great space need here be given to this part of his literary work. Some of the chief points in his singularly happy estimate of Lysias will be recalled when it is mentioned that he praises him for such qualities as his purity of expression, his gift of characterisation and his unfailing propriety, his vividness and his inimitable charm<sup>1</sup>.

To Isocrates also high praise is awarded on certain sides. Dionysius discerns not only the great importance of Isocrates in the evolution of Greek prose style, but also his essential nobility of aim. With regard to this latter characteristic he says, "the strongest exhortations to virtue are to be found in the speeches of Isocrates. I maintain that those who would learn the secret of patriotism, not in part only but in its fulness, should have this orator at their fingers' ends.....He shows (sc. in one of his speeches) that it is not a large fleet of warships, nor Greeks governed by force, that make a country great, but righteous aims and the succour of the wronged<sup>2</sup>." At the same time he is quite alive to such weak points of Isocrates as his excessive regard for smoothness of style and a pleasant cadence. "The thought is often the slave of rhythmical expression, and truth is sacrificed to elegance.....Now the natural course is for the expression to follow the ideas, not the ideas the expression<sup>3</sup>." Elsewhere he condemns his tameness and his verbosity: "He cannot move his hearers when he wishes it, and for the most part he does not even wish it.....His style [in a certain passage] should have struck home like a blow. As a matter of fact, it is supple, and smooth, and glides gently through the ear like oil<sup>1</sup>."

The significance of Isaeus, no less than of Isocrates, as a factor in the development of Greek prose style is fully recognised by Dionysius. "If I were asked why I have included Isaeus, imitator as he is of Lysias, I should give as my reason that in his speeches are to be sought (as it seems to me) the germs and first-beginnings of the oratorical power of Demosthenes, which is universally regarded as the height of perfection<sup>2</sup>." But highly as Isaeus is esteemed by Dionysius, he is in one particular rated lower than Lysias. His speeches do not seem so natural as those of his predecessor. "Any one reading the narrative passages of Lysias, far from suspecting art or trickery, would rather discern the promptings of nature and truth, overlooking the simple fact that the imitation of nature is the highest triumph of art..... Lysias (so it seems to me) pursues reality, Isaeus art; the one aims at charm, the other at intensity<sup>3</sup>."—It may be added here that though the essays on Aeschines and Hyperides have been lost, some estimate of the former orator will be found in De Imit. II. Epit. c. 5, of the latter in the same chapter of the De Imit. Epit. and also in the De Dinarcho, cc. 1, 6, 7.

Dionysius refers to the supremacy of Demosthenes among orators as a universally admitted fact<sup>1</sup>. He also emphasizes his own view that, among the orations of Demosthenes, the De Corona holds the foremost place<sup>2</sup>. Something of the same sort might, truly enough, be said of Dionysius' own essay on Demosthenes. In its own way, and within its own limits, it well deserves the title of 'masterpiece' which has been accorded to it<sup>3</sup>. Into none of his studies of the Greek Orators has Dionysius thrown himself with more vigour and enthusiasm. It is his delight to show that Demosthenes "disdained to be an imitator of any single style or man. He saw that they were all half-finished and incomplete, and from them all he chose and wove together the best and most useful elements, and fashioned one language out of many.....His style resembles the fabled Proteus of our ancient poets." Moreover, the effect of his speeches on their readers is wonderful, and the effect on their original hearers must have been more wonderful still: "When I take up one of his speeches, I am entranced and carried hither and thither, stirred now by one emotion, now by another. I feel distrust, anxiety, fear, disdain, hatred, pity, good-will, anger, jealousy. I am agitated by every passion in turn that can sway the human heart, and I am like those who are being initiated into wild mystic rites..... When we who are centuries removed from that time, and are in no way affected by the matters at issue, are thus carried off our feet and mastered and borne wherever the discourse leads us, what must have been the feelings excited by the speaker in the minds of the Athenians and the Greeks generally, when living interests of their own were

From Demosthenes to Deinarchus (ὁ κρίθινος Δημοσθένης) is a long step downwards. But this does not prevent Dionysius' account of Deinarchus from being, of its kind, an excellent piece of work. The design of the series to which it belongs was in the main biographical. Not Deinarchus only, but Lysias (cp. de Lysia, cc. 12, 14), Isaeus (cp. de Isaeo, c. 2), and other orators, were included in the set. The essay on Deinarchus proves at once the thoroughness and the independence of the studies of Dionysius. The subject had, he tells us, been faultily treated by previous authorities, and he had therefore to rely upon himself. He gives brief particulars of the life, and some estimate of the style, of Deinarchus. But his chief aim is to compile a list of that orator's speeches, discriminating the spurious from the genuine. The speeches are, therefore, classified under heads as follows: (1) genuine (γνήσιοι) public speeches, (2) spurious (ψευδεπίγραφοι) public speeches, (3) genuine private speeches, (4) spurious private speeches. In mentioning each speech care is taken to give (for its better identification) not only its title or description, but also the words with which it opens. Particular speeches are rejected by Dionysius on grounds of chronology or of inferior workman-

Verb.* (e.g. c. 23) prove that Dionysius was sensitive to matters connected with rhythm, and with the avoidance or allowance of hiatus, which might easily escape a modern reader. His hints have, indeed, led in modern times to the formulation of more definite rules than he has himself transmitted to us: cp. Sandys, Ciceronis ad M. Brutum Orator, pp. xxvii, xxviii.

ship<sup>1</sup>. In the result, 29 public and 31 private orations are assigned to Deinarchus, while the remainder (numbering more than 27: the loss of the conclusion of the essay precludes a more precise statement) are declared to be spurious. It may be added that, where (as is the case not with Deinarchus but with other orators) modern criticism has had an opportunity of forming an independent opinion, it has usually concurred in the views of Dionysius on questions of authenticity.

(3) Ep. ad Ammaeum I.

In the De Dinarcho we see Dionysius at his best as a literary historian, a rôle which (as already indicated) fits him far better than that of the general historian. It is a question of literary history also that forms the subject of Ep. ad Amm. I. Of this Epistle, as it is one of the three edited in this volume, a short summary, chapter by chapter, may conveniently be offered here.

SUMMARY.

c. 1. A Peripatetic philosopher, whose name is not given, had undertaken to prove that the Rhetoric of Aristotle was earlier than the speeches of Demosthenes, who owed his success as an orator to the observance of its precepts.

c. 2. Dionysius, in a letter addressed to his friend Ammaeus, proposes to refute this assertion.

c. 3. He desires to show that Demosthenes was at the height of his fame, and had delivered his most celebrated speeches, at the time when Aristotle wrote his Rhetoric.

c. 4. The dates of the birth of Demosthenes and of the delivery of twelve of his speeches are assigned. All these dates are earlier than the end of the Olynthian War (348 B.C.).

<sup>1</sup> A good example of the application of the chronological test may be quoted from the De Dinarcho c. 13, where the dry conclusion 'Deinarchus was not ten years old at the time' is noteworthy: Πρὸς Πεδία παραγραφή. 'κατὰ τὸν νόμον τούτων.' οὗτος ὁ λόγος εἰρηται ἐπὶ Ἀριστοδήμου ἀρχοντος, ὡς ἐξ αὐτοῦ τοῦ λόγου γίνεται δῆλον. οἱ μὲν γὰρ εἰς Σάμον ἀποσταλέντες κληροῦχοι κατὰ τούτων τὸν ἀρχοντα ἀπεστᾶλησαν, ὡς Φιλόχορος ἐν ταῖς ἱστορίαις λέγει. Δείναρχος δ' οὐπω δέκατον ἔτος τηλικαῦτα εἶχε.

c. 5. Annals of the life of Aristotle.

cc. 6, 7. In the Rhetoric Aristotle refers to his Topics, Analytics, and Methodics; and this of itself is enough to show that he was no stripling, but a man of mature years, when he wrote the former work.

c. 8. Aristotle mentions the Olynthian War in the Third Book of the Rhetoric.

c. 9. According to the historian Philochorus, this war took place in the archonship of Callimachus, 349 B.C.—Therefore the twelve speeches in question (four against Philip, three on Greek affairs, and five written for the law-courts) must be anterior to the Rhetoric.

c. 10. The same assertion may be made with regard to twelve other speeches of Demosthenes which fall between the Olynthian war and that which broke out in 339 B.C. and ended with the battle of Chaeronea in the following year. The dates of these speeches are given.

c. 11. The comparison of a passage of the Rhetoric (ii. 23) with passages drawn from the Annals of Philochorus and from the De Corona shows that the treatise of Aristotle was subsequent to the archonship of Lysimachides (339 B.C.), and therefore subsequent to this second set of twelve speeches.

c. 12. More than this, the Rhetoric was subsequent to the De Corona itself (330 B.C.). This appears, according to Dionysius, from a passage of the Rhetoric (ii. 23) in which Aristotle actually alludes to the De Corona.—General conclusion. The orator has not derived from the philosopher the art with which his speeches are written. Rather, the philosopher has based his Rhetoric on an examination of the works of Demosthenes and of the orators generally.

The above short sketch of its contents, if supplemented by the Chronological Table to be given later, will show that this Letter to Ammaeus, short as it seems in comparison with some of the more elaborate essays of its author, is yet founded on solid study and wide research. In his eager desire to check those Peripatetics of his day who were inclined to exalt the influence of Aristotle beyond all due measure, Dionysius is betrayed sometimes into overstatement and inaccuracy. But to appreciate his investigation at its true worth, we have only to consider what gaps in our knowledge its loss would have meant. Its contributions to the chronology of Demosthenes' speeches, and of Aristotle's life, are particularly important.

(4) Ep. ad Cn. Pompeium, and the De Imitatione.

The contents of the Ep. ad Cn. Pompeium can be indicated very briefly. The Letter is specially interesting because of the light it throws on Dionysius' attitude towards Plato, a point to which we must recur in a moment.

SUMMARY.

c. 1. Dionysius has received a letter from Pompeius, expressing surprise at the treatment of Plato in the otherwise admirable works of the author. Dionysius explains his attitude, and undertakes to defend it. If he has resorted to the method of comparison, he has not done so unnecessarily or without good precedent.

c. 2. A passage characterising the style of Plato is reproduced from the De admiranda vi dicendi in Demosthene (cc. 5, 6). From the judgment there pronounced Dionysius cannot recede. He seeks, indeed, to show that Pompeius, as well as he, recognises the occasional lapses to which genius is subject.

c. 3. Pompeius has sought, further, to learn the views of Dionysius with reference to Herodotus and Xenophon. This leads Dionysius to quote from the Second Book of his De Imitatione (περὶ μιμήσεως) a long passage (extending to the end of the Letter) relating to several Greek historians of note. In the present chapter Herodotus and Thucydides are compared, with regard to choice and treatment of subject-matter and with regard to style.

c. 4. Appreciation of Xenophon under the two aspects of subject-matter and style. Comparison with Herodotus.

c. 5. Similar criticism of Philistus, and comparison with Thucydides.

c. 6. Similar estimate of Theopompus.

In the third chapter Dionysius explains the scope of each of the three books of his De Imitatione, and states that the last of the three was not yet finished. None of the books now survive, though we can gauge the general character of the second from the extract here given and from a passage occurring at the commencement of the De Thucydide. The fragments once classified under the title De Veterum Censura (τῶν ἀρχαίων κρίσις) belong to an Epitome of the De Imitatione made by some late hand. In its original form, the work must have been one of the most important literary productions of Dionysius.

What, now, are the criticisms which Dionysius, greatly daring, permits himself to pass upon Plato? They are to be found not only in the Ep. ad Pompeium, but in the De adm. vi dic. in Demosth. (cc. 5, 6, 23—29, 32) and in the De Comp. (c. 18). In the De Compositione the remarks of Dionysius are laudatory, but subject to a certain qualification. "Plato has a marvellous sense of melody and rhythm. And if his skill in choosing his words had equalled his uncommon gifts of composition, he would have outstript Demosthenes in beauty of literary expression, or brought the race to an even finish. As it is, he commits some blunders in his choice of diction, especially where he affects an elevated, unusual, and highly wrought style<sup>1</sup>." The passage repeated in the ad Pompeium (c. 2) from the De adm. vi dic. in Dem. (cc. 5, 6) is of the same general tenour, and lays stress on the view that Plato is not at his best when he is most elaborate. Later on (c. 23) in the essay on Demosthenes, Dionysius explains his position more fully. He has declined, he there says, to be awed into silence by respect for a great name, and he is ready to submit the issue to the judgment of all unbiassed men of letters. His strictures appertain, we may add, chiefly to the department of style, and are supported by various quotations from the Menexenus. The selection of the Menexenus (an inferior, if not a spurious work) shows no prejudice on the part of Dionysius except that of his vocation<sup>2</sup>. He is a

<sup>2</sup> The summary criticism he gives (de adm. vi dic. in Dem. c. 29) of the Menexenus seems to show that he recognises it as a distinctly inferior work of its author: δι' ὅλου γὰρ ἂν τις εὖροι τοῦ λόγου πορευόμενος τὰ μὲν οὐκ ἀκριβῶς οὐδὲ rhetorician, and it is as a teacher of rhetoric that he judges Plato. Like other rhetoricians, he tends to think of authors chiefly as subjects for imitation, a topic on which he had himself written three books<sup>1</sup>. And with the robust commonλεπτῶς εἰρημένα, τὰ δὲ μειρακιωδῶς καὶ ψυχρῶς, τὰ δὲ οὐκ ἔχοντα ἰσχὺν καὶ τόνον, τὰ δὲ ἡδονῆς ἐνδεᾶ καὶ χαρίτων, τὰ δὲ διθυραμβώδη καὶ φορτικά. ἐγὼ δ' ἤξιον πάντα γενναῖα εἶναι καὶ σπουδῆς ἄξια. The striking passage at the beginning of c. 32 of the same essay also shows clearly (in connexion with the Menexenus) Dionysius' appreciation of reality—his sense of the futility of a mere rhetorical exercise.

<sup>1</sup> Cp. de Thucyd. c. 25, δεσθεὶς σοῦ πάλιν καὶ τῶν ἄλλων φιλολόγων τῶν ἐντευξομένων τῇ γραφῇ, τὸ βούλημά μου τῆς ὑποθέσεως ἧς προήρημαι σκοπεῖν, ὅτι χαρακτηρὸς ἐστὶ δῆλως ἅπαντα περιειληφύια τὰ συμβεβηκότα αὐτῷ καὶ δεδομένα λόγου, σκοπὸν ἔχουσα τὴν ἀφέλειαν αὐτῶν τῶν βουλευσομένων μμεῖσθαι τὸν ἄνδρα. ad Pomp. c. 3, τοὺτους γὰρ ἐγκρίνω τοὺς ἄνδρας <ὡς> εἰς μίμησιν ἐπιτηδευστέτους. In reference to this question of imitation, it is important to bear in mind two points. (1) Imitation was a regular part of the training given in the rhetorical schools. Cp. [Cornificius] ad Herennium i. 2, 3, 'Haec omnia tribus adsequi poterimus: arte, imitatione, exercitatione.' Oratorical excellence, that is to say, depends on the study of the theory of rhetoric, on imitation, and on practice; and imitation is further defined as follows, 'imitatio est, qua inpellimur cum diligenti ratione ut aliquorum similes in dicendo velimus esse' (ibid.). (2) It is expressly stated by Dionysius that there were perverse imitators of Plato and Thucydides (not to mention other Attic writers) who aped their eccentricities rather than their true excellences. de Dinarcho c. 8, καὶ οἱ μὲν Πλάτωνα μμεῖσθαι λέγοντες καὶ τὸ μὲν ἀρχαῖον καὶ ὑψηλὸν καὶ εὐχαρὶ καὶ καλὸν οὐ δυνάμενοι λαβεῖν, διθυραμβώδη δὲ ὀνόματα καὶ φορτικά εἰσφέροντες κατὰ τοῦτ' ἐλέγχονται βᾶδως. de adm. vi dic. in Dem. c. 23, ἐπεὶ τινες ἀξιούσι πάντων αὐτὸν ἀποφαίνειν φιλοσόφων τε καὶ ῥητόρων ἐρμηνεύσαι τὰ πράγματα δαιμονιώτατον παρακελεύονται τε ἡμῖν ὄρω καὶ κανὼν χρῆσθαι καθαρῶν ἅμα καὶ ἰσχυρῶν λόγων τούτῳ τῷ ἀνδρὶ. de Dinarcho c. 8, οἱ δὲ Θουκυδίδην ἡλοῦν λέγοντες καὶ τὸ μὲν εὐτονον καὶ στερεὸν καὶ δεινὸν καὶ τὰ τούτοις ὅμοια χαλεπῶς ἐκλαμβάνοντες, τοὺς δὲ σολοικοφανεῖς σχηματισμοὺς καὶ τὸ ἀσαφὲς προχειρίζομενοι, πᾶν εὐχερῶς ἂν ἀλίσκονται ἐκ τούτου τοῦ παραγγέλματος. With this view of the imitators of Thucydides, cp. Cic. Orat. c. 9 § 30 'ecce autem aliqui se Thucydidios esse profitentur, novum quoddam imperitorum et inauditum genus,' and § 32 'huius (Thuc.) tamen nemo neque verborum neque sententiarum gravitatem imitatur; sed, cum mutila quaedam et hiantia locuti sunt, quae vel sine magistro facere potuerunt, germanos se putant esse Thucydidios. nactus sum etiam, qui Xenophontis similem esse se cuperet, cuius sermo est ille quidem melle dulcior, sed a forensi strepitu remotissimus.' Dionysius' own advice on the subject of imitation is given in de Thucyd. c. 55, οὐκ ἂν δκνήσαιμι τοῖς ἀσχοῦσι τοὺς πολιτικούς λόγους ὑποτίθεσθαι τοῖς γε δὴ τὰς κρίσεις ἀδιαστρόφους ἐτι φυλάσσουνσι, Δημοσθένει συμβούλῳ χρησαμένους, ὃν ἅπαντων ῥητόρων κράτιστον γεγενῆσθαι πειθόμεθα, ταύτας μμεῖσθαι τὰς κατασκευάς, ἐν αἷς ἢ τε βραχύτης καὶ ἢ δεινότης καὶ ἢ ἰσχύς καὶ sense which characterises him he sees that the imitation of Plato is likely to lead lesser mortals into much foolish extravagance. This is perhaps the best explanation that can be suggested of Dionysius' attitude, though it must be admitted that he seems sometimes to show himself blind to the fine irony and other subtle qualities for which Plato is so remarkable<sup>1</sup>. He is, however, unquestionably right in maintaining that, from the limited point of view to which he confines himself (viz. the history of the development of Greek oratorical prose), Demosthenes is a more important figure than even the great idealist Plato with his mighty imaginative range and his wonderful charm of style.

(5) Ep. ad Ammaeum II and the De Thucydide.

The First Letter to Ammaeus dealt with a literary problem, the supposed indebtedness of Demosthenes to Aristotle. The interest of the Second Letter is rather grammatical or linguistic than literary, its subject being the peculiarities of the style of Thucydides.

SUMMARY.

c. 1. Ammaeus had urged that the observations previously published by Dionysius on the style of Thucydides would be more concrete and convincing if accompanied by specific examples. Dionysius acts upon the suggestion.

c. 2. As a basis for the present supplement, Dionysius quotes from the twenty-fourth chapter of his longer treatise, the De Thucydide, ὁ τόνος καὶ ἡ μεγαλοπρέπεια καὶ αἱ συγγενεῖς ταύταις ἀρεταὶ πᾶσιν ἀνθρώποις εἰσὶ φανεραὶ· τὰς δὲ αἰνιγματώδεις καὶ δυσκαταμαθήτους καὶ γραμματικῶν ἐξηγήσεων δεομένας καὶ πολλὸν τὸ βεβασανισμένον καὶ τὸ σολοικοφανὲς ἐν τοῖς σχηματισμοῖς ἐχούσας μὴτε θαυμάζειν μὴτε μμεῖσθαι. Cp. Cic. Orat. c. 9 § 30, 'ipsae illae contiones ita multas habent obscuras abditasque sententias, vix ut intellegantur; quod est in oratione civili vitium vel maximum.'

a summary account of the distinguishing features of Thucydidean idiom. This account is now to be illustrated point by point.

c. 3. The employment (by Thucydides) of obscure, obsolete, difficult and poetical words.

c. 4. Employment of periphrasis and brachylogy.

c. 5. Use of noun for verb.

c. 6. Use of verb for noun. [The topic of the interchange of common and proper nouns seems to have been omitted by Dionysius, or to have been accidentally lost.]

c. 7. Use of active for passive voice.

c. 8. Use of passive for active.

c. 9. Interchange of singular and plural number.

c. 10. Confusion of the three genders.

c. 11. Use of cases.

c. 12. Use of tenses.

c. 13. Sense-constructions whereby the plural number is substituted for the singular or the singular for the plural. [Between chapters 13 and 14 would naturally have come the topics which are suggested by the words ἐν δὲ τοῖς συνδυασμοῖς.....φαντασίας in c. 2. The explanation of the omission must again be either the negligence of Dionysius or the faultiness of our manuscript tradition.]

c. 14. Substitution of persons for things and of things for persons.

c. 15. Parentheses.

c. 16. Involved expressions.

c. 17. Showy figures of the rhetoricians<sup>1</sup>.

The Second Letter to Ammaeus refers us to the De Thucydide, and that treatise raises the general question of the attitude of Dionysius towards Thucydides. Not that the De Thucydide (taken together with its appendix, the Second Letter to Ammaeus) is the only part of his writings in which Dionysius expresses his views of Thucydides. Further indications will be found in the third chapter (itself copied from the De Imitatione) of the Letter to Pompeius, in chapter twenty-two of the De Compositione, and in chapters one, nine and ten of the De admir. vi dicendi in Demosthene. But as a comprehensive treatise expressly devoted to this subject, the De Thucydide is the capital document to which we naturally turn in order to ascertain Dionysius' matured estimate of the great historian.

The History of Thucydides is considered in the De Thucydide under the two usual divisions of subject-matter (cc. 6—20) and of style (cc. 21—55). It will be convenient here to reverse the order and take the department of style first. Dionysius has both praise and blame for the style of Thucydides. He can transcribe a really great passage (vii. 69—72) of Thucydides, and pay a really fine tribute to it (de Thucyd. cc. 26, 27). He can at the same time point out that another passage (iii. 81, 82) is of a distinctly inferior character (de Thucyd. cc. 29 ff.), and he is in one case audacious enough to suggest a smoother version (ibid. c. 25). The general conclusion reached is that the narrative passages are, with few exceptions, altogether admirable and adapted for every kind of service, whereas the speeches are not all suitable for imitation<sup>1</sup>. Thus we come once more to the consideration ever uppermost in Dionysius' mind, that of imitation, and we have to imagine the absurdities to which the attempts of ambitious speakers to imitate Thucydides must have led<sup>2</sup>. Like imitators generally, they caught the mannerisms rather than the manner, the eccentricities rather than the essential features.

But in reviewing the work of Thucydides, Dionysius goes further than when dealing with Plato. Feeling himself to be not only a rhetorician but a historian, he has dealt with Thucydides from the point of view of subject-matter; and the third chapter of his Letter to Pompeius accordingly furnishes some strange reading. It is not so much that he prefers the subject chosen by Herodotus to that chosen by Thucydides. Others since his time have entertained and defended this preference, and Dionysius himself gives a more judicious statement of his views on the point in the sixth chapter of his De Thucydide and (indirectly) in the introduction to his Antiquitates. What distresses the reader is the seeming assumption that the prime object of history is to please or to instruct rather than simply to tell the truth; and not even the tribute paid to Thucydides as a truth-teller in the later and more mature De Thucydide (cc. 7, 8) can entirely remove the unsatisfactory impression left in this respect by the Letter to Pompeius. In this matter Dionysius falls far short of the ideal sketched by Polybius before him, and after him by Lucian<sup>1</sup>.

Under the heading of subject-matter (τὸ πραγματικὸν μέρος), Dionysius discusses (de Thucyd. cc. 1, 20) not only Thucydides' choice of theme but also his method of handling it (οἰκονομία). The topic of οἰκονομία ('management') in its turn yields such subdivisions as 'distribution' (διαίρεσις), 'order' (τάξις) and 'treatment in detail' (ἐξεργασία), under which headings he groups criticisms of the annalistic method of Thucydides, of the opening and the abrupt ending of his History, of the place assigned to the famous 'Funeral Oration,' of the supposed want of proportion shown in various parts of the work. But these detailed criticisms we cannot now enter into. Enough to say that, if some of them are well-founded, others seem to show that Dionysius was greatly lacking in width of view and in historical perspective. He has, however, as has been (perhaps too piquantly) observed, cruelly expiated any injustice in his judgments on Thucydides by coming before the world as a historian himself<sup>1</sup>.

V. RELATION OF DIONYSIUS AS A LITERARY CRITIC TO THE ROMANS AND TO THE GREEKS.

We pass now from this account of Dionysius' essays in criticism to the question of the relation in which they stand to the Latin and Greek literature of his own and other times. Latin literature, as here coming only to a slight extent under review, may be treated first and summarily.

Following a long-established custom, Dionysius composes his critical writings in the form of letters, addressed to one or other of his literary friends, patrons, or pupils. It is not easy to determine the nationality of all these persons, but Quintus Aelius Tubero, to whom the De Thucydide is addressed, is clearly a Roman and possibly no other than the eminent jurist and historian. The young Melitius Rufus, to whom Dionysius offers the De Compositione, was also a Roman, his father being a highly valued friend of the author<sup>2</sup>. Gnaeus Pompeius Geminus was, his name notwithstanding, perhaps rather a Greek than a Roman, and will therefore more fitly be considered later.

It would be interesting, did not the inquiry open a somewhat extensive field, to illustrate, by other examples than that of Dionysius, the position occupied at Rome by the Greek men of letters who resided there. We must here be content with quoting Dionysius' own testimony to the part played by Rome in that purification of literary taste to which he himself contributed so much. "I believe that this great revolution (sc. the reversion to the Attic models) was caused and originated by Rome, the mistress of the world, who drew all eyes upon herself. The principal agents were members of the ruling classes of Rome, distinguished by their high character and by their excellent conduct of public affairs, and highly cultivated men of lofty critical instincts. Under their administration the saner elements in the commonwealth have grown still further in strength, and folly has been constrained to be discreet. Accordingly many important historical works are written by men of our day, and many graceful specimens of civil oratory are produced, together with philosophical treatises of no mean order. Many other fine works on which both Romans and Greeks have lavished great pains have appeared, and may be expected to appear; and since so vast a revolution has been effected in so short a time, I should not be surprised if that former fashion of insensate oratory failed to survive another generation. The reduction of a giant bulk to small dimensions may well be followed by complete extinction<sup>1</sup>."

This passage may be taken to imply that Dionysius had at least a general knowledge of the Latin literature which was being produced during his own time. But the knowledge was probably only general. Although he was himself a writer of history and although he had (as he has told us) learnt the Latin language, he never mentions the historian Livy—any more than Livy mentions him. Nor does he, literary critic though he is, make any reference to the Ars Poetica (or to any other poem) of Horace. And yet he must have been a close contemporary of Horace, whose life covered the years 65 to 8 B.C. The fact may be that Dionysius was influenced more directly, and perhaps more healthily, by the Roman men of affairs with whom (or with whose sons) his vocation brought him into contact than by any Roman man of letters. It is possible also that he felt that his reputation would be exposed to less risk if he confined his criticisms to Greek literature, with which he was intimately familiar, than if he ventured on ground where he could not tread so securely.

Orat.*, proem., c. 3, αἰτία δ' οἶμαι καὶ ἀρχὴ τῆς τοσαύτης μεταβολῆς ἐγένετο ἡ πάντων κρατοῦσα Ῥώμη πρὸς ἑαυτὴν ἀναγκάζουσα τὰς ὅλας πόλεις ἀποβλέπειν καὶ ταύτης δὲ αὐτῆς οἱ δυναστεύοντες κατ' ἀρετὴν καὶ ἀπὸ τοῦ κρατίστου τὰ κοινὰ διοικούντες, εὐπαίδευτοὶ πάνυ καὶ γενναῖοι τὰς κρίσεις γενόμενοι, ὅφ' ὧν κοσμοῦμενον τό τε φρόνιμον τῆς πόλεως μέρος ἐτι μᾶλλον ἐπιδέδωκεν καὶ τὸ ἀνόητον ἡνάγκασται νοῦν ἔχειν. τοιγάρτοι πολλαὶ μὲν ἱστορίαι σπουδῆς ἄξια γράφονται τοῖς νῦν, πολλοὶ δὲ λόγοι πολιτικοὶ χαρίεντες ἐκφέρονται φιλόσοφοι τε συντάξεις οὐ μὰ Δία εὐκαταφρόνητοι ἄλλαι τε πολλαὶ καὶ καλά πραγματεῖαι καὶ Ῥωμαίοις καὶ Ἕλλησιν εὖ μάλα διεσπουδασμένα προεληλύθασί τε καὶ προελεύσονται κατὰ τὸ εἶκος. καὶ οὐκ ἂν θαυμάσαιμι τηλικαύτης μεταβολῆς ἐν τούτῳ τῷ βραχεῖ χρόνῳ γεγενημένης, εἰ μηκέτι χωρήσει προσωτέρω μᾶς γενεᾶς ὁ ζῆλος ἐκείνος τῶν ἀνοήτων λόγων· τὸ γὰρ ἐκ παντὸς εἰς ἐλάχιστον συναχθὲν ῥάδιον ἐξ ὀλίγου μὴδὲ εἶναι.

The last supposition may help to explain the absence, in Dionysius' critical writings, of any reference to a Roman writer of an earlier generation, whose fame (already great in his lifetime) had had time to grow still greater, since he died some thirteen years before Dionysius came to Rome. Dionysius' friend and contemporary, Caecilius of Calacte, was the author of a comparison (σύγκρισις) between Cicero and Demosthenes, for making which he was afterwards taxed with temerity by Plutarch (Demosth. Vit. c. 3), who likens him to a fish out of water. The author of the De Sublimitate (XII. 4) ventures to make the same comparison, but with all due apologies for his deficiencies as a Greek. Dionysius seems to have thought it better to refrain altogether. At all events, be the reason what it may, he never refers to Cicero, whether as an orator or as a writer on rhetoric, nor does he quote, for purposes of literary illustration, from any Latin author whatsoever<sup>1</sup>.

It may be added that a similar reluctance to estimate the literary qualities of works written in another language may, indirectly, account for the fact that the critical judgments pronounced on Greek authors by Quintilian in the first chapter of the Tenth Book of his Institutio Oratoria often bear a marked resemblance to those of the De Imitatione. It would seem probable that Quintilian drew them from some Greek source which Dionysius himself also used<sup>1</sup>. The coincidences, close as they are, hardly warrant the assumption of direct transference from the pages of Dionysius<sup>2</sup>.

It has just been stated, or implied, that Dionysius himself drew from earlier Greek sources. This point needs some little discussion in detail. But before speaking of his Greek predecessors, we shall find it convenient to say a word about his Greek contemporaries. The contemporary name which we most naturally associate with Dionysius of Halicarnassus is that of Caecilius of Calacte, his fellow-worker (on somewhat different lines) in the Attic Revival during the age of Augustus. In one of the letters here edited (ad Pomp. c. 3 fin.) Dionysius refers affectionately to his "dear friend Caecilius" as concurring with him in a certain view. A fuller account of the life and writings of Caecilius will be found elsewhere<sup>3</sup>. Here it need only be noted that he wrote an essay On the Sublime, which formed the controversial basis of the treatise with the same title issued later (probably only shortly later) by the author traditionally known as 'Longinus.' When it was first observed that the best manuscript ascribes the extant treatise On the Sublime "to Dionysius or Longinus," the suggestion was made that Dionysius of Halicarnassus might be its author. But against this speculation, the argument from style and spirit (usually precarious) seems here decisive, even if it were not supported by other kinds of evidence. Dionysius, with the views he held of Plato as a writer, could not have admired and imitated him with the fervour shown in the De Sublimitate. Not Dionysius, but the friend Pompeius, whom he addresses in the Letter inscribed with his name, adopts the attitude which the unknown writer of the De Sublimitate bears towards Plato; and conjecture (if seeking an author in the age of Dionysius) might have done worse than fix on this Pompeius. His full name appears (cp. ad Pomp. cc. 1, 2) to have been Gnaeus Pompeius Geminus. It is possible that he was some Greek freedman, or Greek client, of the great Pompeius, and that he was named after him. To judge from the latter part of the second chapter of the Letter addressed to him by Dionysius, he wrote in Greek and was a warm admirer of Plato, whose occasional lapses he defended on the principle expounded with much eloquence in the De Sublimitate. Probably he practised as a rhetorician, and at Rome. Besides Pompeius, three other contemporaries (Ammaeus, Demetrius, Zeno) mentioned by Dionysius appear to have been Greeks, but the question of their identification is attended with many serious difficulties<sup>1</sup>. It may be added that among the later Greek rhetoricians Dionysius enjoyed great fame as one of the most eminent critics of antiquity. It was no doubt his wide reputation in this respect that caused him to be coupled with Longinus in the conjectural title prefixed (probably by Byzantine scholars) to the De Sublimitate. He was regarded as a paramount authority on the study of rhetoric<sup>2</sup>.

To guide us in estimating the obligations of Dionysius to his predecessors in the province of rhetoric and literary criticism we have a good many statements of his own scattered up and down his critical writings. We find in him some emphatic or qualified declarations of independence, and also many direct or indirect acknowledgments of indebtedness. For example, he states, in the fourth chapter of the De Compositione, that when he decided to write a treatise on that subject he looked about to see whether any previous writers had treated of it. With this object he paid special attention to the philosophers of the Stoic school, who (to do them justice) had given no slight attention to the department of expression. But he had found no contribution, small or great, made by any writer of note to the branch of rhetorical inquiry which he had himself chosen<sup>1</sup>. Similar in tone is the emphatic "I" of which Dionysius is in the habit of making use when he wishes to lay stress upon his own originality<sup>2</sup>. A more qualified claim is advanced in c. 4 of the introduction to the Ancient Orators. "These are fine subjects and indispensable for students of political philosophy. Nor indeed are they familiar or hackneyed topics. I myself, at all events, am not aware that I have come across any such book, although I have made diligent search. I do not, however, make any positive assertion with an assumption of certain knowledge. There may well be writings of the kind which have escaped my notice. It is an act of great audacity—one may almost say, of lunacy—to set oneself up as a standard of universal knowledge and to deny the occurrence of something which may possibly have occurred. So on these points, as I said, I have no positive assertion to make<sup>3</sup>." At first sight this curious passage has an air of something like dissimulation about it. But the truth probably rather is that Dionysius is quite sincere and straightforward in thus guarding himself against the possibility that, in the multitude of critical writings produced in his own and previous times, something might emerge to convict him of plagiarism!

When acknowledging, as he often does, his indebtedness to his predecessors, Dionysius is given to quoting a half-line of Euripides, "for not mine the word!". He also uses such expressions as "much has been said on these topics by our predecessors<sup>2</sup>." And, when occasion demands it, he eschews merely general statements and specifies his authorities by name<sup>3</sup>.

✓ The most direct and explicit mention of Aristotle in particular will be found in the latter part of the De Compositione, where a statement of Dionysius is defended from any possible suspicion of novelty or paradox by a detailed reference to the Third Book of the Rhetoric<sup>4</sup>. In the De Isocr. c. 18, as elsewhere occasionally in the rhetorical writings, similar references are made to Aristotle as a generally recognised authority. But on the whole, as the second chapter of the First Letter to Ammaeus shows, Dionysius is inclined to resist the extravagant claims made by the Peripatetics on behalf of the founder of their school. He reminds the readers of that chapter that eminent services had been rendered to the art of rhetoric not only by philosophers but by a number of orators and professional rhetoricians whose names he mentions. This list deserves a brief analysis. Seven of the names—Antiphon, Isocrates, Isaeus, Demosthenes, Æschines, Lycurgus, Hyperides—belong to the canon of the Ten Attic Orators. Thrasymachus appears in the First Book of Plato's Republic, while Theodorus is mentioned in the Phaedrus (266 E). Alcidas was a pupil of Gorgias. Theodectes, Philiscus and Cephisodorus were disciples of Isocrates, Theodectes being known also from Aristotle's Poetics as a writer of tragedies<sup>1</sup>. Anaximenes was a rhetorician and historian of the time of Philip and Alexander, and was in all probability the author of the Rhetorica ad Alexandrum, once attributed to Aristotle<sup>2</sup>.

A few further comments suggested by the names thus selected may not be amiss. As might have been expected from the adverse judgments of Dionysius elsewhere (e.g. ad Pomp. c. 2, ad Amm. II. c. 2, de Isaeo c. 19), no place is found for Gorgias on the list, though his pupil Alcidas is there. And yet Gorgias of Leontini is the real founder of artistic prose, and extravagance may be condoned (or at any rate, can be understood) in the case of an enthusiastic propagandist. Not only Gorgias, but also his satirist Plato is absent from the list of Dionysius, who hardly ever refers to Plato as an authority on any branch of rhetoric<sup>3</sup>. This may partly be because Plato symbolized the old quarrel between philosophy and rhetoric, but it is also connected with the feeling of dislike entertained by Dionysius for vicious imitations of Plato's style.

<sup>2</sup> Criticisms of the merits of some of the authorities here mentioned will be found in De Isaeo cc. 19, 20.—From these, and other passages already quoted, it will be clear to the reader how many out-of-the-way pieces of literary history we owe to Dionysius: cp. de Isocr. c. 18, de adm. vi dic. in Dem. c. 3, de Thucyd. cc. 5, 51.

<sup>3</sup> In De Comp. c. 16 Plato is recognised as the founder of etymological science: τὰ κράτιστα δὲ νέμω, ὡς πρῶτον τὸν ὑπὲρ ἐτυμολογίας εἰσαγαγόντι λόγον, Πλάτωνα τῷ Σωκρατικῷ, πολλαχῇ μὲν καὶ ἄλλοι, μάλιστα δὲ ἐν τῷ Κρατύλῳ. In the De Isocr. c. 12 there is a reference to Plato's comparative estimate (Phaedrus 279 A) of Isocrates and Lysias.

Isocrates, on the other hand, is commended both as a writer and as a theorist<sup>1</sup>. Of the 'philosophy' of Isocrates Dionysius was an ardent admirer (de Isocr. cc. 4, 12; ad Pomp. c. 6).

There remain certain other names, which do not appear in the enumeration given in the First Letter to Ammaeus for the simple reason that they belong to a period later than the one there in question. Foremost among these names is that of Theophrastus, the pupil and successor of Aristotle, who is mentioned repeatedly (though not always with approbation) in the rhetorical writings of Dionysius<sup>2</sup>. The influence, direct or indirect, of the lost work of Theophrastus On Style (περὶ λέξεως) was probably great. References are also found in Dionysius not only to Peripatetics like Theophrastus, but to Stoics (de Comp. cc. 2, 4; de adm. vi dic. in Dem. c. 48) and Epicureans (ibid. c. 24 ad fin.), as also to Demetrius Phalereus (de Dinarcho c. 2, ad Pomp. c. 2, de adm. vi dic. in Dem. c. 5) and Demetrius Magnes (de Dinarcho c. 1), to the scholars of Alexandria (especially Callimachus, de Dinarcho cc. 1, 10, de Isaeo c. 6, de adm. vi dic. in Dem. c. 13) and of Pergamus (τοὺς ἐκ Περγάμου γραμματικούς de Din. c. 1, ἐν τοῖς Περγαμηνοῖς πίναξι ibid. c. 11: in ad Amm. I. c. 4 the expression οἱ τοὺς ῥητορικοὺς πίνακας συντάξαντες will cover the librarians both of Alexandria and of Pergamus), and to various writers on metre, rhythm and the like (de adm. vi dic. in Dem. c. 48, de Comp. cc. 14, 22)<sup>3</sup>. In general it may be said of Dionysius, in relation to his technical predecessors in the field of literary criticism, that he is a scholar of wide and sound learning who seeks the best wherever he can find it and thinks he finds it rather in the writers of an older generation than in those of modern days (οἱ νέοι τεχνουργάφοι, de Isaeo c. 14 fin.). Of originality he shows as much as it is usually given to scholars to show. His judgment was entirely independent, and its value is even more decisively displayed on the literary or aesthetic than on the strictly technical side.

VI. GENERAL ESTIMATE OF DIONYSIUS AS A LITERARY CRITIC. HIS AIMS AND HIS ACHIEVEMENTS.

Beyond and above the question of the relation of Dionysius to his Greek predecessors in the sphere of rhetoric and literary criticism is that of his attitude towards Greek literature generally. His true distinction as a critic is his purity of taste. When the temptation to follow later and more pretentious writers must have been great, he reverts to the real classics of Greece. He is eager to restore the great authors to their rightful supremacy; he labours to discriminate between their genuine and their spurious works. Practical in his aims, he desires to determine the highest standard reached by Attic prose, and to mould thereby his own writing, that of his fellow-Greeks, and (indirectly) that of his Roman pupils also.

His own graphic description of the vicissitudes of taste which ended in the Attic Revival of his own day may be read in the Proem of his Ancient Orators:—

“Great is the gratitude due to our own age, most excellent Ammaeus, not only on account of the recent improvement in other pursuits, but above all because of the great advance made in the study of Civil Oratory. In the times before our own the ancient and philosophic rhetoric was flouted, grossly outraged, and brought lower and lower. Its decline and gradual decay began with the death of Alexander of Macedon, and in our own generation it reached the verge of final extinction. Another rhetoric stole into its place,—one intolerably ostentatious, shameless and dissolute, and without part in philosophy or any other liberal discipline. Craftily it deluded the ignorant multitude. Not only did it live in greater affluence and luxury and style than its predecessor, but it attached to itself those offices and those foremost public positions, which should have been held by the philosophic rhetoric. Very vulgar it was and offensive, and in the end it reduced Hellas to the same plight as the households of miserable prodigals. For just as in their houses the wedded wife, free-born and virtuous, sits with no authority over what is hers, while a riotous mistress, by her presence spreading confusion in the home, claims rule over all the property, spurning and intimidating the wife: so in every city and not least (which was the worst calamity of all) in the recognised centres of culture, the Attic Muse, ancient and sprung from the soil though she was, had been robbed of her dignities and covered with dishonour, whereas her rival, who had come but yesterday from one of the dens of Asia, a Mysian or Phrygian wanton or some Carian abomination, presumed to govern Greek states, driving the true queen from the public council-chambers,—the ignorant ousting the philosophic, the wild the chaste<sup>1</sup>."

After thus vividly depicting the fortunes of the more meretricious qualities of style, Dionysius next proceeds to congratulate his age and the united forces of the 'philosophers' (ἐπαινείν τὸν παρόντα χρόνον καὶ τοὺς συμφιλοσοφούντας ἀνθρώπους ἄξιον, c. 2 ibid.) on the magnitude of the revolution so successfully effected, and to note (c. 3: cp. p. 34 supra) the <sup>1</sup> *De Antiq. part borne in it by the leading men of Rome. The protracted struggle which he has in mind is that between Asianism and Atticism, or the cult of the florid writers (conveniently but not exhaustively grouped as 'Asiatic') of the period between Demosthenes and Cicero, as contrasted with the counter-movement which sought its models in the Attic writers of the best days of Greece. Especially notable is the term φιλόσοφος which Dionysius, in this and other passages, applies to the Atticist rhetoric as distinguished from the Asiatic. By φιλόσοφος he means 'theoretic' (or 'technical' in the best sense), 'artistic,' 'scientific'; the antithesis of all that is merely 'empirical,' merely the result of practice.

The style of a leader of the Asiatic school, Hegesias of Magnesia, and some criticisms passed upon it by Dionysius, have already been noticed in the account given above (p. 12) of one of the early chapters of the De Compositione. Later (c. 18) in that treatise Dionysius enlarges on the sins of Hegesias in the matter of rhythm. "Upon my soul, I cannot decide whether he was so dense and stupid that he could not see which are the noble and ignoble rhythms, or (as I am rather inclined to think) so infatuated and fatally misguided that he chose the worse although he knew the better. Ignorance may frequently hit the mark: it is wilfulness that invariably misses it. Among all the works left by the man it would be impossible to find a single page successfully composed<sup>1</sup>." In proof he quotes a historical passage from Hegesias, and compares it with an excerpt from Homer (Iliad xxii. 395—411) full of nobly rhythmical lines.

It is by comparisons such as this, in which Homer is pitted against the arch-offender Hegesias, that Dionysius endeavours to raise the standard of literary taste in his own time. He appeals to the example of the truly classical writers,—not only of the Attic but of a still earlier period, not only prose-writers but poets. To him posterity thus owes, among other boons, the preservation (in de Comp. cc. 23, 26) of Sappho's Hymn to Aphrodite and of Simonides' Danae<sup>1</sup>. His apt choice of illustrations, and his skill in comparing those drawn from one author with those drawn from another, are admirably shown when he is dealing with the prose-writers of Greece, and especially with his own favourite orators. His critical writings form a golden treasury of extracts from the best writers of Greece.

Dionysius more than once reminds us of the often-forgotten truth that the excellence of the ancient authors was the result of ingenious and elaborate art. He will not exempt from this rule even Homer himself, who seems so spontaneous in his utterance. Homer is, in his view, a sedulous artist (cp. the verbs φιλοτεχνεῖν and καινουργεῖν as applied to Homer in de Comp. cc. 15, 20). In the same way he mentions (c. 25 ibid.: cp. de adm. vi dic. in Dem. c. 25) the stories current in antiquity concerning the infinite pains bestowed by Isocrates upon his Panegyric and by Plato upon the opening of his Republic. Admitting that the labour is severe, he maintains that the joys of literary success are a sufficient compensation, and he condemns unsparingly the dictum of Epicurus that 'writing entails no trouble' (de Comp. c. 24 fin.). At the conclusion of his own treatise he reminds his young pupil that the precepts of literary manuals cannot, of themselves, make powerful debaters of those who are minded to dispense with study and practice<sup>2</sup>.

At the same time Dionysius knows, as well as anyone, that the best art is that which best conceals itself. A studied simplicity is the ideal he upholds. Of Plato he says, "he is a long way superior when he employs language which is plain and correct, language which seems to be natural but is really elaborated with unoffending and unpretentious skill" (ad Pomp. c. 2). Lucidity of expression he pronounces to be the foremost excellence of style<sup>1</sup>. When discussing the obscurities of language found in the History of Thucydides and especially in his Speeches, he remarks that "only a select few can comprehend the whole of Thucydides, and not even they without occasional help in the way of grammatical explanations<sup>2</sup>." He adds his opinion that the language of Thucydides was unique even in his own day, and combats the view that a historian (as distinguished, say, from an advocate) may plead in excuse for an artificial style that he does not write for "people in the market-place, in workshops or in factories, nor for others who have not shared in a liberal education, but for men who have reached rhetoric and philosophy after passing through a full curriculum of scientific studies, to whom therefore none of these expressions will appear unfamiliar<sup>3</sup>." Obscurity and eccentricity, he says in effect, are not virtues except in the eyes of literary coteries; presumably a speaker speaks, and a writer writes, in order to be understood.

It is interesting to observe that what Dionysius prescribed to others he did not fail to practise himself. As for his own style of writing it may suffice to remark that, whatever else may be thought about it, it is at least eminently lucid and unaffected. It is equally evident that, in his own domain of literary criticism, he was a hard and assiduous worker. His range was wide, and his knowledge of the countless 'lines'

(στίχοι) he mentions from time to time seems to have been minute and accurate. He united most effectively philological with rhetorical studies. He was at once a scholar and a critic. Thoroughness was his watchword. In his view, rhetoric ought not to be practised by arm-chair professors<sup>1</sup>. He is no frivolous dabbler or dilettante (such as the many who have made literary criticism a byword for superficiality), but he believes in serious, prolonged, and fortifying literary and literary-historical studies. He furnishes us with one of the earliest and the best examples of the systematic exercise of the art of literary criticism.

We cease to wonder at his success as a literary critic when we consider the temper in which he approached his task. Not only was he a lover alike of work and of simplicity, but he possessed other excellent critical attributes. Let him, yet once again, speak for himself. (Criticism, he says, must be outspoken but not censorious.) He protests that throughout his life he had been on his guard against a contentious and quarrelsome and promiscuously snarling attitude<sup>2</sup>. But he claims full critical liberty, and exposes a popular fallacy which is as hollow as it is offensive. "If we are inferior in ability to Thucydides and other writers, we do not therefore forfeit the right to form an estimate of them<sup>3</sup>." In the same spirit he declares (ad Pomp. c. 1) that though it would be an act of impiety to attack Plato after the manner of a Zoilus, it is none the less the duty of the critic (as opposed to the panegyrist) to examine into the truth with the utmost exactitude, and to pass over none of an author's good or bad qualities. For such an inquiry the method of comparison, invidious though it may seem, is essential (ibid.).

Dionysius may not always have succeeded in attaining the high ideals which he thus fearlessly set before him. His immediately practical aim has sometimes led him to circumscribe his activities, and to dwell, at perhaps disproportionate length, on matters of style and purely verbal criticism. But for the modern world even these limitations have not been altogether a disadvantage. He has helped where help was most needed. He has brought to bear upon the discussion of delicate questions of literary appreciation the trained instinct of a critic for whom Greek was still a spoken tongue, and whose ears still rang with the music of the language as it once was heard upon the lips of the great Athenian Orators.

Of the first two Literary Letters only inferior manuscripts (none of them earlier than the fifteenth century) survive. The text of the Second Letter to Ammacus depends on the excellent Codex Parisinus 1741 (preserved in the Bibliothèque Nationale), the readings of which are here reported after a fresh collation made last summer by the editor. The other manuscripts of the Second Letter are derived from this, but their readings deserve some consideration if only as helping to indicate the extent to which conjectural emendation is required in the First Letter and in the Letter to Pompeius. Some remarks on the general question of the textual criticism of the Scripta Rhetorica of Dionysius will be found in a notice (Classical Review, xiv. pp. 452—455) of the admirable edition by Usener and Radermacher, of which the first volume was published in 1899.

DIONYSIUS TO HIS FRIEND AMMAEUS
WITH CORDIAL GREETINGS.

I

Our age has produced many strange paradoxes; and among them I was inclined to class the following proposition when I first heard it from yourself. You said that a certain Peripatetic philosopher, in his desire to do all homage to Aristotle the founder of his school, undertook to demonstrate that it was from him that Demosthenes learnt the rules of rhetoric which he applied in his own speeches, and that it was through conformity to the Aristotelian precepts that he became the foremost of all orators. Now my first impression was that this bold disputant was a person of no consequence, and I advised you not to pay heed to every chance paradox. But when on hearing his name I found him to be a man whom I respect on account of his high personal qualities and his literary merits, I did not know what to think; and after careful reflection I felt that the matter needed a more attentive inquiry. It was possible that I had failed to discern the truth and that he had not spoken at random. I wished, therefore, either to relinquish my previous opinion if convinced that the Rhetoric of Aristotle preceded the speeches of Demosthenes, or to induce the person who has adopted this view, and is prepared to put it in writing, to change it before giving his treatise to the world.

II

You have yourself furnished me with a powerful motive for a thorough investigation of the truth. For you have invited me to state the arguments by which I have convinced myself that it was not till Demosthenes had reached his prime, and had delivered his most celebrated speeches, that Aristotle wrote his Rhetoric. And you seemed to me, further, to be right in counselling me not to rest my case on mere indications or probabilities or pieces of extraneous evidence, since no such proof is absolutely conclusive, but rather to bring forward Aristotle himself as witnessing by means of his own treatise to the truth of my view. This I have done, my dear Ammaeus, out of regard not only for the truth, which I think ought to be fully sifted in every issue, but for the satisfaction of all who are interested in civil oratory. I would not have them think that all the precepts of rhetoric are included in the Peripatetic philosophy, and that nothing important has been devised by men such as Theodorus and Thrasymachus and Antiphon, nor by Isocrates and Anaximenes and Alcidas, nor by their contemporaries who composed rhetorical handbooks and engaged in oratorical contests—such men as Theodectes and Philiscus and Isaeus and Cephisodorus, together with Hyperides and Lycurgus and Aeschines. Nor would I have it thought that Demosthenes himself, who surpassed all his predecessors and contemporaries and defies the rivalry of the ages, would not have risen so high if he had only obeyed the precepts of Isocrates and Isaeus and had not mastered the Rhetoric of Aristotle.

III

‘That story is not true<sup>1</sup>,’ my dear Ammaeus, nor did the Rhetoric of Aristotle, which was issued at a later date, govern the composition of the speeches of Demosthenes. These were indebted to other teachers, concerning whom I will state my views in a separate work, since the subject needs full discussion and could not well be treated by the way. Meanwhile I will endeavour to show that, at the time when Aristotle wrote his Rhetoric, Demosthenes was already at the height of his public career and had delivered his most celebrated speeches, forensic and deliberative, and was famous throughout Greece for his eloquence. And perhaps I ought first of all to mention the facts I have taken from the current histories, which the compilers of biographies have bequeathed to us. I will begin with Demosthenes.

IV

Demosthenes was born in the year preceding the hundredth Olympiad. In the archonship of Timocrates he had entered upon his seventeenth year....He commenced to write public speeches in the archonship of Callistratus, when twenty-five years of age. The first of his forensic speeches is that against Androtion, written for Diodorus, who was arraigning the proposal of Androtion as unconstitutional. Another belonging to the same period—that of the archonship of Callistratus—is the speech on the Exemptions. This he delivered himself; it is the most graceful and the best written of all his speeches. Under Diotimus, who succeeded Callistratus, he pronounced before the Athenians his first parliamentary oration, that entitled On the Navy Boards in the bibliographical lists of the orators. In this speech he urged the Athenians not to break the peace concluded with the Persian King nor be the first to make war, unless they should have organised their navy, in which their chief strength lay. He himself suggests a method of organisation. Under Thudemus, who succeeded Diotimus as archon, he wrote the speech Against Timocrates for the use of Diodorus, who was prosecuting Timocrates as the proposer of an unconstitutional measure. The oration On the Relief of the Megalopolitans he delivered himself in the assembly. Thudemus was succeeded by Aristodemus, in whose archonship Demosthenes began his orations against Philip, and delivered a speech before the people on the dispatch of the mercenary force and of the flying squadron of ten galleys to Macedonia<sup>1</sup>. At this time he also wrote his speech Against Aristocrates for Euthycles, who was arraigning an unconstitutional proposal. Under Theellus, who came next after Aristodemus, he delivered his oration On the Rhodians, in which he sought to persuade the Athenians to abolish the Rhodian oligarchy and enfranchise the commons. Under Callimachus, the second archon in succession to Theellus, he delivered three orations, urging the Athenians to send reinforcements to the Olynthians, against whom war was being waged by Philip. The first begins, 'In many instances, men of Athens, one may see'; the second, 'Not the same thoughts present themselves to my mind, men of Athens'<sup>2</sup>; the third,

'You would, men of Athens, give a great price<sup>1</sup>.' During this same archonship was written the speech Against Meidias, which Demosthenes composed after the vote of censure passed on Meidias by the people.

I have so far mentioned twelve public speeches, seven of the deliberative, five of the forensic order. All of these are earlier than the Rhetoric of Aristotle, as I will prove both from what others relate concerning that author and from his own writings. I begin with his biography.

Aristotle was the son of Nicomachus, who traced his pedigree and his profession to Machaon, the son of Aesculapius. His mother, Phaestis, was descended from one of those who led the colony to Stageira from Chalcis. He was born in the ninety-ninth Olympiad, when Diotrophes was archon at Athens, and was, therefore, three years older than Demosthenes. In the archonship of Polyzelus, after his father's death, he went to Athens, being then eighteen years of age. Having been introduced to the society of Plato, he spent a period of twenty years with him. Upon Plato's death, in the archonship of Theophilus, he repaired to Hermias, despot of Atarneus, and after spending three years with him retired to Mytilene in the archonship of Eubulus. Thence he proceeded, during the archonship of Pythodotus, to the court of Philip, and spent eight years there as Alexander's tutor. After the death of Philip, in the archonship of Evaenetus, he returned to Athens, and taught in the Lyceum for a space of twelve years. In the thirteenth year, after the death of Alexander in the archonship of Cephisodorus, he betook

Such, then, are the records transmitted to us by the biographers of Aristotle. What the philosopher says of himself in his own writings completely cuts away the ground beneath the feet of those who wish to assign him honours to which he is not entitled. In addition to many other proofs, none of which I need recall at present, there is the passage he has written in the First Book of the treatise in question. Here we have the strongest evidence that he was no stripling when he composed the Rhetoric, but in the prime of life, having previously published his treatises the Topics, the Analytics, and the Methodics. At the commencement of the section in which he sets forth the advantages embraced in the art of rhetoric, he has the following words which are here quoted as they stand: 'Rhetoric is useful because truth and justice are, by nature, stronger than their opposites. If, therefore, judicial trials do not end as they should, a man's defeat must be due to himself; and this is deserving of censure. Moreover, in addressing some audiences, it is not easy, even when we possess the most exact and methodical knowledge, to carry conviction by means of it. For methodical statement is a kind of instruction; and instruction is here out of the question. But in our proofs and arguments we must make use of processes understood by all, as we remarked in the Topics when treating of the manner of addressing the multitude<sup>1</sup>.'

and 'syllogisms,' Aristotle has the following references to his Analytics and his Methodics. 'Of proofs obtained by real or apparent demonstration there are, in Dialectic, these varieties: induction, syllogism, and apparent syllogism. So also in Rhetoric, where example corresponds to induction, enthymeme to syllogism, and apparent enthymeme to apparent syllogism. By "enthymeme" I mean a rhetorical syllogism, and by "example" a rhetorical induction. Everyone relies for demonstrative proof in Rhetoric upon examples and enthymemes; upon these and these only. If, therefore, it is absolutely necessary that whatever is proved should be proved either by syllogism or by induction—and this is plain to us from the Analytics—it follows of necessity that enthymeme and example are respectively identical with syllogism and induction. The difference between example and enthymeme is clear from the Topics. In that work we have already said, when treating of syllogism and induction, that the proving of a rule in many similar instances is called an induction in Dialectic and an example in Rhetoric; while the conclusion that from certain premisses something different follows, because of these and owing to the fact that these are true either universally or as a general rule, is called a syllogism in Dialectic and an enthymeme in Rhetoric. It is evident that each form of rhetorical argument has its own strong points, the statement made in the Methodics holding good here also'.<sup>1</sup> In writing thus Aristotle has given unequivocal evidence about himself to the effect that he composed the Rhetoric in his later years and after the publication of his most important treatises. These are the proofs by which I think I have sufficiently demonstrated what I proposed to make clear, that the orator had practised the art of speaking before the philosopher had formulated the theory. In fact, Demosthenes began at the age of twenty-five to engage in public affairs, to address the assembly, and to write speeches for the law-courts. About the same period Aristotle was still a disciple of Plato, and he lived to be seven-and-thirty without any school to lead and without any body of personal adherents.

VIII

Possibly, however, some captious critic will raise an objection even in the face of these conclusions. He may admit that the Rhetoric was written later than the Analytics and Methodics and Topics, but maintain that Aristotle may very well have composed all these treatises while still a disciple in the school of Plato. Such a contention is absurdly improbable; it is a violent attempt to commend the wretched paradox that it is likely that the unlikely may at times occur. Omitting, therefore, what I could have said in reply, I turn to the pieces of evidence which Aristotle himself furnishes in the Third Book of the Rhetoric, where he has these words (here quoted word for word) on the subject of metaphor: 'Of the four kinds of metaphor, the proportional are the most in repute. It is thus that Pericles compared the loss of the youth of a state in war to taking the spring out of the year....So also, when Chares was eager to have his conduct in the Olynthian War submitted to a scrutiny, Cephisodotus impatiently exclaimed

ἡγανάκτει φάσκων αὐτὸν εἰς πνῖγμα τὸν δῆμον ἄγχοντα
τὰς εὐθύνας πειρᾶσθαι διδόναι.'

Thus does the philosopher himself clearly prove that he wrote the Rhetoric after the Olynthian War. Now that war took place in the archonship of Callimachus, as Philochorus shows in the Sixth Book of his Atthis, where his words (exactly given) are: 'Callimachus of the deme Pergase. In his time the Olynthians, attacked by Philip, sent ambassadors to Athens. The Athenians made an alliance with them.....and sent to their aid two thousand targeteers, and thirty galleys under the command of Chares, as well as eight others which they put into commission for the occasion<sup>2</sup>.' Next, after describing the few intervening events, he proceeds: 'About the same time the Chalcidians of the Thracian seaboard were harassed by the war and sent an embassy to Athens. The Athenians dispatched to their assistance Charidemus, who held command in the Hellespont. Charidemus brought with him eighteen galleys and four thousand targeteers and a hundred and fifty horsemen. Supported by the Olynthians, he advanced into Pallene and Bottiaea, and ravaged the country<sup>3</sup>.' Later on he writes thus on the subject of the third alliance: 'The Olynthians sent a fresh embassy to the Athenians, begging them not to see them irretrievably ruined, but to send out, in addition to the troops already there, a force consisting not of mercenaries but of Athenian citizens. Thereupon the Athenian people sent them other seventeen Enough has been already said to expose the vain pretensions of those who affirm that the Rhetoric of Aristotle inspired Demosthenes. Before the date of the Rhetoric, Demosthenes had already delivered four orations against Philip and three on the affairs of Greece. He had also written for the law-courts five public speeches, which no one could brand as inferior, poor, and showing no signs of technical mastery, because composed earlier than the Rhetoric. Having, however, advanced thus far, I shall not halt, but show that his most famous speeches generally, whether addressed to the people or to the law-courts, had been delivered before the publication of the Rhetoric. Once more Aristotle himself shall be my witness. After the archonship of Callimachus, in whose year of office the Athenians sent their reinforcements to Olynthus at the instance of Demosthenes, came the archonship of Theophilus, in whose time Olynthus fell into the hands of Philip. Next came Themistocles, under whom Demosthenes pronounced the fifth of his orations against Philip. This speech, which is concerned with the protection of the islanders and the cities of the Hellespont, begins as follows: 'This, men of Athens, is what I have been able to contrive<sup>2</sup>.' Under Archias, the successor of Themistocles, Demosthenes urged the Athenians not to attempt to hinder Philip from becoming a member of the Amphictyonic Council, nor to give him an occasion for reopening the war, now that they had recently made peace with him. This oration begins thus: 'I see, men of Athens, that the present crisis<sup>1</sup>.' Archias was succeeded by Eubulus, and he by Lyciscus. It was in Lyciscus' year of office that Demosthenes pronounced the seventh of his orations against Philip. He there replies to the envoys from the Peloponnese, and begins thus: 'When, men of Athens, speeches are made<sup>2</sup>.' The next archon to Lyciscus was Pythodotus, under whom Demosthenes replied to the envoys of Philip by the delivery of the eighth of the orations which bear the king's name. The opening of this speech is: 'It is not possible, men of Athens, that the accusations<sup>3</sup>.' At the same time he also composed the speech against Aeschines, who had to render an account of his conduct in the second embassy, the object of which was to bind Philip by oaths. The successor of Pythodotus was Sosigenes, under whom he delivered the ninth oration against Philip, that on the soldiers in the Chersonese, the aim of which was to prevent the disbandment of the mercenaries commanded by Diopieithes. This begins: 'It would be best, men of Athens, that all public speakers<sup>4</sup>.' Under the same archon he delivered the tenth speech, in which he endeavoured to show that Philip was violating the peace and was the aggressor in the war. The speech begins: 'Although many speeches, men of Athens, are made<sup>5</sup>.' After Sosigenes the next archon was Nicomachus, in whose time he delivered the eleventh oration, on the subject of the violation of the peace by Philip, and urged the Athenians to send reinforcements to the people of Byzantium. It begins: 'Serious as I consider, men of Athens<sup>6</sup>.' In the archonship of Theophrastus, who followed Nicomachus, Demosthenes urged the Athenians to sustain the war bravely, Philip having already declared it. This, the last of the orations against Philip, opens thus: 'The fact that Philip did not, men of Athens, make peace with you, but only deferred the war<sup>7</sup>.'

To show that all the speeches I have enumerated were delivered by Demosthenes before the publication of the Rhetoric of Aristotle, I will bring forward Aristotle himself as witness. In the course of the passage in the Second Book of the Rhetoric, in which he defines the topics from which enthymemes are derived, he deals with that of time and illustrates it by examples. I will quote his actual words. 'Another topic has reference to time. For example, Iphicrates in defending himself against Harmodius said, "If before rendering these services I had claimed the statue in the event of rendering them, you would have granted it. Will you refuse it, when they are already rendered? Nay, do not promise a reward in anticipation, and withhold it after realisation." Again, with the object of inducing the Thebans to allow Philip a passage through their territory into Attica, it might be urged that if he had made the demand before he helped them against the Phocians they would have promised, and it would therefore be a scandal if they refused the request now because he then trusted to their honour and forbore to extort pledges<sup>1</sup>.'

Now the date at which Philip called upon the Thebans to grant him a passage into Attica reminding them of his help in the Phocian War, is clear from known facts. The circumstances were as follows. In the archonship of Themistocles, after the capture of Olynthus, Philip made a treaty of friendship and alliance with the Athenians. This covenant lasted seven years, till the year of Nicomachus. It was brought to an end under the archon Theophrastus, who succeeded Nicomachus. The Athenians accused Philip of beginning the war, while Philip blamed the Athenians. The reasons for which the two parties, each of which claimed to be in the right, engaged in the war, and the date at which they violated the peace, are precisely indicated by Philochorus in the Sixth Book of his Atthis, from which I will quote simply the essential particulars: 'Theophrastus of the deme Halae. Under his archonship Philip, first of all, attacked Perinthus by sea. Failing here, he next laid siege to Byzantium and brought engines of war against it'.<sup>1</sup> Afterwards he recounts the allegations which Philip made against the Athenians in his letter, and adds these words which I quote as they stand: 'The people, after listening to the letter and to the exhortations of Demosthenes, who advocated war and framed the necessary resolutions, passed a resolution to demolish the column erected to record the treaty of peace and alliance with Philip, and further to man a fleet and in every other way to prosecute the war energetically'.<sup>2</sup>

After assigning these events to the archonship of Theophrastus, he describes the occurrences of the succeeding year when Lysimachides was archon after the violation of the peace. Here again I will quote only the most essential particulars. 'Lysimachides of the deme Acharnae. Under this archon the Athenians, in consequence of the war against Philip, deferred the construction of the docks and the arsenal. They resolved, on the motion of Demosthenes, that all the funds should be devoted to the campaign. But Philip seized Elateia and Cytinium, and sent to Thebes representatives of the Thessalians, Aenianians, Aetolians, Dolopians, Phthiotians. An embassy, headed by Demosthenes, was at the same time despatched by the Athenians, with whom the Thebans resolved to enter into alliance'.<sup>3</sup> Now it is clear that it was under the archonship of Lysimachides, when both sides had already made preparations for war, that the Athenian envoys headed by Demosthenes and those sent by Philip entered Thebes. Demosthenes himself, in his speech On the Crown, will show clearly what were the claims preferred by the two embassies. I will quote from the actual text the parts which bear upon the question. 'By these means Philip sowed discord among the Greek states; and encouraged by the decrees and answers already mentioned, he came with his army and seized Elateia. He assumed that, whatever happened, we and the Thebans could never again act in concert<sup>1</sup>.' Moreover, after describing the events which then ensued and describing also the speeches delivered by himself before the public assembly and the circumstances under which he was sent by the Athenians as an ambassador to Thebes, he adds (to quote his actual words): 'When we arrived at Thebes, we found representatives of Philip, of the Thessalians and of the rest of the allies, already there and our friends in a state of alarm, his full of confidence<sup>2</sup>.' Then, after requesting a certain letter to be read, he continues: 'So when the Thebans had convened the assembly, they introduced Philip's representatives first, because they had the status of allies. And these came forward and addressed the people, paying many compliments to Philip, and laying to your charge many faults, recalling every instance in which you at any time opposed the Thebans. In brief, they urged them to show their gratitude for the favours conferred upon them by Philip, and to seek satisfaction for the wrongs done them by you. They might avenge themselves in either of the two following ways as they pleased; they might allow Philip's troops to pass through their territory to attack you, or they might join him in invading Attica<sup>3</sup>.' Now if it was in the archonship of Lysimachides, the successor of Theophrastus, and after the peace had been dissolved, that the ambassadors of Philip were sent to the Thebans urging them to join in invading Attica, or (failing that) to allow Philip the right of passage in recognition of his services in the Phocian War, and if further this is the embassy mentioned by Aristotle, as I showed a little earlier when I cited his own words, then surely it is demonstrated by irrefutable proofs that all the speeches of Demosthenes which were addressed to public assemblies and to law-courts before the archonship of Lysimachides are earlier than the Rhetoric of Aristotle.

XII

I will add another piece of evidence furnished by the philosopher, from which it will appear still more plainly that his Rhetoric was composed after the war which broke out between Philip and the Athenians, when Demosthenes had reached his prime as a statesman and had delivered all the deliberative and the forensic speeches which I mentioned a little while ago. Among the topics of enthymemes enumerated by him, the philosopher includes that of cause. I will adduce his own words. 'Another topic consists in regarding what is no cause as a cause, because (it may be) one thing happens with or after another. Post hoc is assumed to be identical with propter hoc; and this is specially the case in the world of politics. Demades, for example, considered the administration of Demosthenes to have caused all the troubles of the state, for it was thereafter that the war occurred<sup>1</sup>. Now what can the speeches have been which Demosthenes composed under the guidance of the Rhetoric of Aristotle if (as I have previously shown) all the public addresses on which his reputation and fame depend preceded the war? The sole exception is the speech On the Crown. This, and this alone, came before a tribunal after the war, in the archonship of Aristophon, eight years after the battle of Chaeroneia, six years after the death of Philip, at the time of Alexander's victory at Arbela.

If some captious critic suggests that possibly Demosthenes did not write this, the best of all his speeches, before he had perused the Rhetoric of Aristotle, I have much to say in reply to him. But in order that my discussion may not run to undue length, I engage to show, on the evidence of Aristotle himself, that this oration also was completed before the publication of the Rhetoric. In dealing with the topic of enthymemes derived from relative terms, he writes the exact words which follow. 'Another topic is that derived from relative terms. If the terms "honorably" or "justly" can be applied to the man who acts, they can also be applied to the man who is affected by the action; if they can be applied to a command, they can also be applied to its execution. In this spirit the tax-gatherer Diomedon exclaimed: "If it is no discredit to you to sell the taxes, it is no discredit to us to buy them." And if the terms "honorably" or "justly" can be applied to a man affected by an action, they can also be applied to the action itself and to the man who has done or is doing it. This is a case of unsound argument. For if a man has been justly treated, it does not necessarily follow that he has been justly treated by a particular agent. Accordingly we must consider separately whether the treatment is right and whether the action is right, and then deal with the case in whichever of the two ways seems the more suitable. For sometimes there is a distinction to be made, as in the Alcmaeon of Theodectes .....Another example is the trial in which Demosthenes and those who slew Nicanor were involved<sup>1</sup>. What, then, is the trial of Demosthenes [and of those who slew Nicanor] to which Aristotle here refers, in which the most important point in the controversy was derived from the topic of relative terms? It is that in which he defended, against Aeschines, Ctesiphon, who had proposed to crown Demosthenes and was on his trial as the author of an unconstitutional measure. For in this case the point at issue was not the general question whether Demosthenes deserved honours and crowns as having provided for the construction of the fortifications out of his own means, but whether he deserved these things while he was an official liable to account, and notwithstanding the fact that it was illegal to crown men who were so liable. Here we have the topic of relative terms: the point is whether a man liable to account had the same right to receive, as the people to give, the crown. It is my opinion, therefore, that Aristotle refers to this trial. If, however, it is maintained that the reference is to the accusation of corruption against which Demosthenes pleaded in the archonship of Anticles, about the time of the death of Alexander, this will prove that the Rhetoric of Aristotle is later than the speeches of Demosthenes by a still greater interval.

But enough. The orator did not derive from the philosopher the rules of rhetoric which he embodied in his celebrated speeches. On the contrary, Aristotle wrote his Rhetoric with the works of Demosthenes, and the other orators, within his reach. I have, I think, proved my point.

DIONYSIUS TO GNAEUS POMPEIUS

WITH GREETINGS.

I

I have received with great pleasure the scholarly letter you sent me. Zeno, our common friend, has supplied you (so you write) with a copy of my treatises. In going through them and making them your own, on the whole you admire them, but are dissatisfied, you say, with one portion of their contents, namely, the criticism of Plato. Now you are right in the reverence you feel for that writer, but not right in your view of my position. You may rest assured that I must be numbered among those who have fallen most completely under the spell of Plato's gifts of expression. But I will explain to you my attitude towards all thinkers who are public benefactors and desire to reform our lives and words. And what is more, I mean to convince you that I have discovered nothing new, or startling, or contrary to the universally accepted view.

Now I think it is an author's duty, when he elects to write a panegyric of some achievement or some person, to give prominence to merits rather than to any deficiencies.

But when he wishes to determine what is most excellent in some walk of life and what is the best among a number of deeds of the same class, he ought to apply the most rigorous investigation and to take account of every quality whether good or bad. For this is the surest way of discovering truth, than which there is no more precious boon. So much premised, I make a further declaration. If there is any writing of mine which, like the work of Zoilus the rhetorician, contains an attack upon Plato, I plead guilty of impiety. And if when my design is to write a eulogy of him I interweave some fault-finding with my praises, I admit that I am in the wrong and am transgressing the laws by which eulogies are governed among us. For in my opinion they should not contain even vindications, much less detractions. On the other hand, when after undertaking to examine varieties of style, together with their foremost representatives among philosophers and orators, I chose from the entire number three who are generally held to be the most brilliant—Isocrates and Plato and Demosthenes—and among these again I gave the preference to Demosthenes, I thought I did no wrong either to Plato or to Isocrates.

That may be, you say, but you should not have exposed the faults of Plato, in your desire to extol Demosthenes. How then would my argument have undergone the most searching test had I not compared the best discourses of Isocrates and Plato with the finest of Demosthenes, and thus shown with the utmost candour in what respect their discourses are inferior to his, not maintaining that those two writers were always at fault (for that would be sheer lunacy), but not maintaining, either, that they were always and uniformly successful? If I had avoided this course, and had simply eulogised Demosthenes and detailed all his excellences, I should certainly have convinced my readers of the orator's worth; but unless I had compared him with the best of his rivals, I should not have proved that he holds the very first place among all who have distinguished themselves in oratory. For many things which in themselves are thought beautiful and worthy of admiration appear to fall short of their reputation when set side by side with other things that are better. Thus gold when contrasted with other gold is found to be superior or inferior, and this is true of all manufactured articles, and of all objects designed to produce a brilliant effect.

But if in the province of civil oratory the comparative method of inquiry be judged ungracious, and a demand made for the examination of each writer individually, the same restriction will inevitably be introduced everywhere. Poetry will no longer be compared with poetry, nor historical treatise with historical treatise, nor constitution with constitution, nor law with law, general with general, king with king, life with life, tenet with tenet. And yet no reasonable man would acquiesce in this. But if you need also the proofs which personal testimonies supply, to render it more plain to you that the best mode of examination is the comparative, I will pass over all others and appeal to Plato himself as my witness. Desiring to exhibit his own proficiency in civil oratory, he was not satisfied with the rest of his writings, but [in rivalry with] the foremost orator of the time, himself composed in the Phaedrus another speech with Love as its subject. Nor after advancing so far did he pause and leave to his readers to decide which speech was the better, but he actually assailed the faults of Lysias, allowing that he had excellences of style, but attacking his treatment of subject-matter. Since, therefore, Plato when engaging in the most vulgar and most invidious of tasks, that of praising himself in respect of his oratorical power, thought he was doing nothing blameworthy in claiming that his own speeches should be examined side by side with those of the best orator of the day, and in exhibiting the errors of Lysias and his own merits, what is there so astonishing in my comparison of the speeches of Plato with those of Demosthenes and my scrutiny of anything I found amiss in them? I forbear to quote from his writings generally, in which he attacks his predecessors, Parmenides, Hippias, Protagoras, Prodicus, Gorgias, Polus, Theodorus, Thrasymachus and many others, not writing of them in a spirit of perfect fairness, but (you must pardon me for saying so) with a touch of vainglory. There was, ~~there~~ really was in Plato's nature, with all its excellences, ~~something of~~ vainglory. He showed this particularly in his jealousy of Homer, whom he expels from his imaginary commonwealth, after crowning him with a garland and anointing him with myrrh<sup>1</sup>. Strange indeed to suppose that Homer needed such compliments in the hour of his expulsion, when it is through him that every refinement, and in the end philosophy itself, passed into human life! But let us suppose that Plato said all this in a spirit of perfect fairness and simply in the interest of truth. What, then, was there to excite surprise in our action when we obeyed his ordinances, and wished to compare the discourses of his successors with his own?

Furthermore, it will be seen that I am not the first and only critic that has ventured to speak his mind about Plato. Nor could anyone justly take me to task on the special ground that I essayed to examine the most distinguished of philosophers, and one more than a dozen generations earlier than myself, in the hope forsooth of obtaining some credit thereby. No, it will be found that many have done so before me, whether in his own time or at a much later date. For his tenets have met with disparagement and his discourses with criticism. First on the list is his most representative disciple Aristotle, and next Cephisodorus, Theopompus, Zoilus, Hippodamas, Demetrius, and many others. These did not attack him out of envy or malice, but in the search for truth. Encouraged accordingly by the example of so many eminent men, and above all of the great Plato himself, I considered that my action was in no way alien to the spirit of philosophic rhetoric when I matched good writers against good. As regards, therefore, the principle on which I acted in comparing style with style, I have defended myself sufficiently even in your eyes, my dear friend.

I have now to refer to my actual remarks on Plato in the treatise on the Attic Orators. I will quote the passage in the words there written<sup>1</sup>. 'The language of Plato, as I have said before, aspires to unite two several styles, the elevated and the plain. But it does not succeed equally in both. When it uses the plain, simple, and unartificial mode of expression, it has an extraordinary charm and attraction. It is altogether pure and translucent, like the most transparent of streams, and it is correct and precise beyond that of any other writer who has adopted this mode of expression. It pursues familiar words and cultivates clearness, disdaining all extraneous ornament. The gentle and imperceptible lapse of time invests it with a mellow tinge of antiquity ; it still blooms in all its radiant vigour and beauty ; a balmy breeze is wafted from it as though from meadows full of the most fragrant odours ; and its clear utterance seems to show as little trace of loquacity as its elegance of display. But when, as often happens, it rushes without restraint into unusual phraseology and embellished diction, it deteriorates greatly. For it loses in charm, in purity of idiom, in lightness of touch. It obscures what is clear and makes it like unto darkness ; it conveys the meaning in a prolix and circuitous way. When concise expression is needed, it lapses into tasteless periphrases, displaying a wealth of words. Contemning the regular terms found in common use, it seeks after those which are newly-coined, strange, or archaic. It is in the sea of figurative diction that it labours most of all. For it abounds in epithets and ill-timed metonymies. It is harsh and loses sight of the point of contact in its metaphors. It affects long and frequent allegories devoid of measure and fitness. It revels, with juvenile and unseasonable pride, in the most wearisome poetical figures, particularly in those of Gorgias ; and "in matters of this kind there is a good deal of the hierophant about him<sup>1</sup>," as Demetrius of Phalerum has somewhere said as well as many others : for "not mine the word<sup>2</sup>."

'Let no one suppose that I say this in general condemnation of the ornate and uncommon style which Plato adopts.

I should be sorry to be so perverse as to conceive this opinion with respect to so great a man. On the contrary, I am well aware that often and on many subjects he has produced writings which are great and admirable and of the utmost power. What I desire to show is that he is apt to commit errors of this description in his more ornate passages, and that he sinks below his own level when he pursues what is grand and exceptional in expression, and is far superior when he employs the language which is plain and exact and seems to be natural but is really elaborated with unoffending and simple artifice. For then he commits either no errors at all or only such as are extremely slight and venial. My own view, however, is that so great a man should have been perpetually on his guard against any censure. Now all his contemporaries, whose names I need not recall, reproach him with the same fault; and the most striking thing is that he does so himself. He was aware of his own lapse from good taste and gave it the name of "dithyramb<sup>1</sup>": a thing I had thought shame to say, true though it be. This trait in him appears to me to be due to the fact that, although he was bred among the Socratic dialogues, which were most spare and most exact, he did not continue under their influence, but became enamoured of the artificiality of Gorgias and Thucydides. It was, therefore, no unnatural result that he should imbibe some of the errors, together with the good points, exhibited by the styles of those authors.

'I will cite examples of the plain and the elevated style from one of the most celebrated books, in which Socrates has addressed the discourses on Love to one of his associates, Phaedrus, from whom the book takes its title....'

In this passage I blame in no way the subject-matter of the writer, but the tendency in the department of expression to figurative and dithyrambic diction, matters wherein Plato loses command of the due mean. And I criticise him not as an ordinary mortal but as a great man who has come near the standard of the divine nature. His fault is that, in imitation of the school of Gorgias, he has introduced the pomp of poetical artifice into philosophical discourses, so that some of his productions are of the dithyrambic order. And what is more, he does not even attempt to hide this failing but avows it. It is clear from your own letter, excellent Geminus, that you yourself entertain the same opinion as I with regard to him. For you write thus, to quote your own words: 'In other forms of expression there may well occur something which deserves mingled praise and blame. But in embellishment whatever is not success is utter failure. So that, in my opinion, these men should be judged not by their few most hazardous attempts but by their many successes<sup>1</sup>.' And a little later you add the following words: 'Although I could defend all, or at any rate most, of these passages, I do not venture to gainsay you. But this one thing I strongly affirm, that it is not possible to succeed greatly in any way without such daring and recklessness as must needs fail now and then<sup>2</sup>.' There is no quarrel between us. You admit that the man who aspires to great things must sometimes fail, while I say that Plato, in his desire for elevated and stately and audacious diction, did not succeed in every detail, but that his mistakes are nevertheless only a small fraction of his successes. And in this one respect, I say, Plato is inferior to Demosthenes, that with him elevation of diction sometimes lapses into emptiness and dreariness, whereas with Demosthenes this is never so, or only very rarely. This is what I have to say with reference to Plato. ✓

You wished also to learn my view with regard to Herodotus and Xenophon, and you wished me to write about them. This I have done in the essays I have addressed to Demetrius on the subject of imitation. The first of these contains an abstract inquiry into the nature of imitation. The second asks what particular poets and philosophers, historians and orators, should be imitated. The third, which treats of the proper manner of imitation, remains unfinished. In the second I write as follows concerning Herodotus, Thucydides, Xenophon, Philistus and Theopompus, these being the writers whom I select as most suitable for imitation:

These are my opinions concerning Herodotus and Thucydides, if I must extend my remarks to them. The first, and one may say the most necessary, task for writers of any kind of history is to choose a noble subject and one pleasing to their readers. In this Herodotus seems to me to have succeeded better than Thucydides. He has produced a national history of the conflict of Greeks and barbarians, 'in order that neither should the deeds of men fade into oblivion, nor should achievements<sup>1</sup>,' to quote from his opening words. For this same proem forms both the beginning and the end of his History. Thucydides, on the other hand, writes of a single war, and that neither glorious nor fortunate; one which, best of all, should not have happened, or (failing that) should have been ignored by posterity and consigned to silence and oblivion. In his Introduction he makes it clear himself that he has chosen a bad subject, for he says that many cities of the Greeks were desolated because of the war, partly by the barbarians and partly by themselves, while proscriptions and massacres greater than any before known occurred, together with earthquakes and droughts and plagues and many other calamities<sup>2</sup>. The natural consequence is that readers of the Introduction feel an aversion to the subject, for it is of the misfortunes of Greece that they are about to hear. As clearly as the story of the wonderful deeds of Greeks and barbarians is superior to the story of the sad and terrible disasters of the Greeks, so clearly does Herodotus show better judgment than Thucydides in his choice of subject. Nor can it truthfully be said that Thucydides was driven, with full knowledge that the earlier events were grander, into this piece of writing by a desire not to treat of the same theme as others. On the contrary, he makes extremely light in his Introduction of the events of ancient days, and says that the achievements of his own time were the most remarkable. It is clear, therefore, that his choice was deliberate. Very different was the course taken by Herodotus. Although his predecessors, Hellanicus and Charon, had previously issued works on the same subject, he was not deterred, but trusted his own ability to produce something better. And this in fact he has done.

A second function of historical investigation is to determine where to begin and how far to proceed. In this respect, again, Herodotus displays far better judgment than Thucydides. He begins with the cause of the original injuries done to the Greeks by the barbarians, and goes on his way till he ends with the punishment and retribution which befell them. Thucydides, on the contrary, starts with the incipient decline of the Greek world. This should not have been done by a Greek and an Athenian, and (what is more) no unappreciated citizen but one to whom his countrymen assigned a foremost place, entrusting him with commands and offices generally. In his malice, he finds the overt causes of the war in the conduct of his own city, although he might have found many other grounds for the outbreak. He might have begun his narrative not with the affairs of Corcyra, but with the magnificent achievements of his country immediately after the Persian War, achievements which subsequently he mentions at the wrong point and in a perfunctory and cursory way. After he had described these events with all the enthusiasm of a patriot, he should then have added that it was through envy and dread thus occasioned that the Lacedaemonians were led to engage in the war, for which they suggested motives of a different nature. He should next have related the occurrences at Corcyra and the decree against the Megarians, together with anything else of the kind he wished to mention. The conclusion of his work is tainted by a more serious error. Although he states that he watched the entire course of the war and promises a complete account of it, yet he ends with the sea-fight which took place off Cynossema between the Athenians and Peloponnesians in the twenty-second year of the war. It would have been better, after he had described all the details of the war, to end his History with a most remarkτὴν θαυμασιωτάτην καὶ μάλιστα τοῖς ἀκούουσι κεχαρσμένην, τὴν κάθοδον τῶν φυγάδων τῶν ἀπὸ Φυλῆς ἂν ἡ πόλις ἀρξαμένη τὴν ἐλευθερίαν ἐκομίσατο.

Τρίτον ἐστὶν ἀνδρὸς ἱστορικοῦ <σκοπεῖν>, τίνα τε δε5 παραλαβεῖν ἐπὶ τὴν γραφὴν πράγματα καὶ τίνα παραλιπεῖν. δοκεῖ δὴ μοι καὶ τούτῳ λείπεσθαι Θουκυδίδης. συνειδὼς γὰρ Ἡρόδοτος, ὅτι πᾶσα μῆκος ἔχουσα πολὺ διήγησις ἂν μὲν ἀναπαύσεις τινας λαμβάνη, τὰς ψυχὰς τῶν ἀκροωμένων ἡδέως διατίθῃσιν, εἰ δὲ ἐπὶ τῶν | αὐτῶν μένη 10 πραγμάτων, καὶ τὰ μάλιστα ἐπιτυγχάνηται, λυπεῖ τὴν ἀκοὴν τῷ κόρῳ, ποικίλην ἐβουλήθη ποιῆσαι τὴν γραφὴν Ὀμήρου ζηλωτῆς γενόμενος· καὶ γὰρ τὸ βυβλίον ἦν αὐτοῦ λάβωμεν, μέχρι τῆς ἐσχάτης συλλαβῆς ἀγάμεθα καὶ αἰεὶ τὸ πλεον ἐπιζητοῦμεν. able incident and one right pleasing to his hearers, the return of the exiles from Phyle, from which event dates the recovery of freedom by Athens.

A third task of the historian is to consider which occurrences he should embody in his work and which he should omit. In this respect, again, it seems to me that Thucydides is inferior. Herodotus, on his part, wished, in imitation of Homer, to give variety to his History. He was aware that every prolonged narrative affects the mind of the hearer pleasantly if it contains a number of pauses, but wearies and satiates (however successful it may otherwise be) if confined to one and the same series of events. If we take up his book, we are filled with admiration till the last syllable and always seek for more. Thucydides, on the other hand, in breathless haste and straining every nerve, describes a single war, heaping battle on battle, armament on armament, word on word. The hearer's mind is in consequence exhausted. 'Even honey,' as Pindar says, 'and the pleasant flowers of love bring satiety<sup>1</sup>.' Occasionally Thucydides has himself realised the truth of my contention that, in a historical writing, change is pleasant and gives variety, and he has taken this course in two or three passages—in inquiring into the cause of the growth of the Odrysian kingdom and in describing the cities of Sicily<sup>2</sup>.

Next it is the function of a historian so to arrange his materials that everything shall be found in its proper place. How, then, do these authors respectively arrange and divide what they have to say? Thucydides keeps close to the chronological order, Herodotus to the natural grouping of events. Thucydides is found to be obscure and hard to follow. As naturally many events occur in different places in the course of the same summer or winter, he leaves half-finished his account of one set of affairs and takes other events in hand. Naturally we are puzzled, and follow the narrative impatiently, as our attention is distracted. Herodotus, on the other hand, begins with the dominion of the Lydians and comes down to that of Croesus, and then passes at once to Cyrus who destroyed the empire of Croesus<sup>1</sup>. Then he begins the story of Egypt, Scythia, and Libya<sup>2</sup>. He relates some of the events as a sequel, takes up others as a missing link, and introduces others as likely to add to the charm of the narrative. Although he recounts affairs of Greeks and barbarians which occurred in the course of some two hundred and twenty years on the three continents and finally reaches the story of the flight of Xerxes, he does not break the continuity of the narrative. The general result is that, whereas Thucydides takes a single subject and divides one whole into many members, Herodotus has chosen a number of subjects, which are in no way alike, and has produced one harmonious whole.

I will mention one other feature of the treatment of subject-matter, a feature which in all histories we look for no less than for any of those already mentioned. I mean the attitude which the historian himself adopts towards the events which he describes. The attitude of Herodotus is fair throughout, showing pleasure in the good and grief at the bad. That of Thucydides, on the contrary, is severe and harsh and proves that he bears a grudge against his country because of his exile. For he details her misdeeds with the utmost exactitude, but when things go right, either he does not mention them at all, or only like a man under compulsion.

In subject-matter Thucydides is for these reasons inferior to Herodotus; in expression he is partly inferior, partly superior, partly equal. I will state my views on these points also.

The first of excellences is that without which style is of no worth in any of its aspects,—language pure in vocabulary and true to Greek idiom. In this respect both are correct writers. Herodotus represents the highest standard of the Ionic dialect, Thucydides of the Attic....Third in order comes the so-called ‘concision.’ In this Thucydides is commonly held to excel Herodotus. It might, indeed, be objected that it is only when united with clearness that brevity is found to be attractive; if it fails in this, it is harsh. However, let us suppose that Thucydides is in no way inferior because of his obscurity. Vividness comes next in order as the first of the extraneous excellences. In this respect both authors are decidedly successful. After this excellence the imitation of traits of character, and of emotions, presents itself. Here the historians divide the credit, for Thucydides excels in expressing the emotions, whilst Herodotus has greater skill in representing aspects of character. Next come the excellences which exhibit loftiness and grandeur of composition. Here, again, the historians are on a par. Then come the excellences which comprise strength and energy and similar qualities of style. In these Thucydides is superior to Herodotus. But in grace, persuasiveness, charm and the like excellences, Herodotus is far superior to Thucydides. In his choice of language Herodotus aims at naturalness, Thucydides at intensity. Of all literary virtues the most important is propriety. In this Herodotus is more careful than Thucydides, who everywhere (and in his speeches still more than in his narrative) shows a want of variety. My friend Caecilius, however, thinks with me that his enthymemes have been imitated and emulated in a special degree by Demosthenes. It may be said in general that the poetical compositions (as I should not shrink from calling them) of both are beautiful. The chief point of difference is that the beauty of Herodotus is radiant, that of Thucydides awe-inspiring. Enough has been said about these historians, although much more could be said, for which there will be another opportunity.

IV

Xenophon and Philistus, who flourished at a later time than these writers, did not resemble one another either in nature or in principles. Xenophon was an emulator of Herodotus in both kinds, matter and language. In the first place, the historical subjects he chose are fine and impressive and such as befit a philosopher: the Education of Cyrus, the portrait of a good and prosperous king; the Expedition of the Younger Cyrus, in which Xenophon, who himself took part in the campaign, extols so highly the bravery of the Greek auxiliaries; and also the Greek History, the story which Thucydides left unfinished, in which are described the overthrow of 'the Thirty' and the restoration of the Athenian walls razed by the Lacedaemonians. It is not only for his subjects, chosen in emulation of Herodotus, that Xenophon deserves commendation, but also for his arrangement of his material. Everywhere he begins and ends in the most fitting and appropriate way. His divisions are good, and so is his order and the variety of his writing. He displays piety, rectitude, resolution, geniality, in a word all the virtues which adorn the character. Such is the manner in which he deals with his subject-matter.

In expression he is partly like Herodotus, partly inferior. He resembles him in marked purity and lucidity of vocabulary; he chooses terms that are familiar and consonant to the theme; and he puts them together with no less charm and grace than Herodotus. But Herodotus also possesses elevation and beauty and stateliness and what is specifically called the 'historical vein.' Not only was Xenophon powerless to borrow this from him, but if occasionally he wishes to enliven his style, like a land-breeze he blows but for a short time and quickly drops. Indeed, in many passages he is unduly long. So far from equalling the success of Herodotus in adapting his language to his characters, he is found on strict examination to be often careless in this respect.

V

Philistus would seem to resemble Thucydides more nearly and to have the same general stamp. Like Thucydides, he has not taken a subject of great utility and public interest, but a single and local one. He has divided it into two parts, entitling the former 'Concerning Sicily,' the latter 'Concerning Dionysius.' But the subject is one, as may be seen from the conclusion of the Sicilian section. He has not presented his narrative in the best order, but has made it hard to follow; his arrangement is inferior to that of Thucydides. No more than Thucydides does he desire to admit extraneous matter, and he is therefore wanting in variety. He displays a character which is obsequious, subservient, mean, and petty. He shuns what is peculiar and curious in the style of Thucydides, and reproduces what is rounded and terse and enthymematic. He falls, however, very far behind the beauty of language and the wealth of enthymemes found in Thucydides. And not only in these respects is he inferior, but also in his composition. The style of Thucydides is full of variety, a fact which is so obvious that I consider it needs no further demonstration. But the language of Philistus is exceedingly uniform and lacking in variety. Many successive sentences will be found to be constructed by him in the same way. For example, at the beginning of the Second Book of his Sicilian History: 'The Syracusans having associated with themselves the Megarians and Ennaeans, and the Camarinaeans having mustered the Sicels and the rest of the allies except the Geloans (now the Geloans said that they would not wage war against the Syracusans); and the Syracusans learning that the Camarinaeans had crossed the Hyrminus.....'<sup>1</sup>: all this is to me obviously most displeasing. He is trivial and commonplace whatever his subject may be, whether he describes sieges or settlements, whether he deals in eulogium or in censure. Moreover, he does not write speeches worthy of the greatness of the speakers, but he makes even his parliamentary orators, one and all, abandon in a panic alike their faculties and their principles. He possesses, however, a sort of natural euphony of style and a well-balanced judgment. And he is a better model for actual pleadings than Thucydides.

and some noteworthy treatises. As a student of history he deserves praise on several grounds. His historical subjects are both good, one of them embracing the conclusion of the Peloponnesian War, the other the career of Philip. His arrangement, also, is good, being in both cases lucid and easy to follow. Especially admirable are the care and industry which mark his historical writing, for it is clear, even if he had said nothing to that effect, that he prepared himself most fully for his task and incurred heavy expense in the collection of his material. Moreover, he was an eye-witness of many events, and came in contact with many leading men and generals of his day, whether popular leaders or more cultivated persons. All this he did in order to improve his History. For he did not (as some do) consider the recording of his researches as a pastime, but as the one thing needful in life. The trouble he took may be inferred from the comprehensiveness of his work. He has related the foundation of nations, described the establishment of cities, portrayed royal lives and peculiar customs, and incorporated in his work everything wonderful or strange found on any land or sea. Nor must it be supposed that this is merely a form of entertainment. It is not so. Such particulars are, it may in general be said, of the greatest utility.

In fine, who will not admit that it is necessary for the votaries of philosophic rhetoric to study the various customs both of foreigners and of Greeks, to hear about various laws and forms of government, the lives of men and their actions, their deaths and fortunes? For such votaries he has provided material in all plenty, not divorced from the events narrated, but in close connexion with them. All these qualities of the historian are worthy of admiration. The same may be said of the philosophical reflections scattered throughout his History, for he has many fine observations on justice, piety, and the rest of the virtues. There remains his crowning and most characteristic quality, one which is found developed with equal care and effect in no other writer, whether of the older or the younger generation. And what is this quality? It is the gift of seeing and stating in each case not only what is obvious to the multitude, but of examining even the hidden motives of actions and actors and the feelings of the soul (things not easily discerned by the crowd), and of laying bare all the mysteries of seeming virtue and undiscovered vice. Indeed, I can well believe that the fabled examination, before the judges in the other world, of souls in Hades when separated from the body is of the same searching kind as that which is conducted by means of the writings of Theopompus. In consequence he was thought malicious on the ground that, where reproaches against distinguished persons were necessary, he added unnecessary details; while in truth he acted like surgeons who cut and cauterize the morbid parts of the system, carrying their operations far down, and yet in no way assailing the healthy and normal organs. Such is an account of the way in which Theopompus deals with his subject-matter.

In style he is most like to Isocrates. His diction is pure, familiar and clear; it is elevated, grand, and full of stateliness; it is formed according to the middle harmony, having a pleasant and easy flow. It differs from that of Isocrates in pungency and energy in some passages, when he gives free play to his emotions, and particularly when he taxes cities or generals with evil counsels and unjust actions. In such criticisms he abounds, and he falls not one whit behind the intensity of Demosthenes, as may be seen from many other writings and from his Chian Letters, in composing which he has obeyed his native instincts. If in the passages on which he has bestowed the greatest pains, he had paid less attention to the blending of vowels, the measured cadence of periods, and the uniformity of constructions, he would have far surpassed himself in expression.

He is also guilty of errors in the sphere of subject-matter, and particularly in regard to his digressions, some of which are neither necessary nor opportune, but childish in the extreme. An instance is the story of the Silenus who appeared in Macedonia, and that of the fight between the serpent and the galley, and not a few other things of the kind.

The study of these historians will suffice to furnish to those who practise civil oratory a suitable fund of examples for every variety of style.

CONCERNING THE CHARACTERISTICS OF THE LANGUAGE OF THUCYDIDES.

DIONYSIUS TO HIS FRIEND AMMAEUS
WITH GREETINGS.

I

I thought I had sufficiently indicated the characteristics of Thucydides when describing the most important and remarkable of those peculiarities which seemed to me to distinguish him from all previous orators and historians. I have, in fact, previously treated the subject in the essays, inscribed with your name, on the Ancient Orators, and a little time before in the treatise on Thucydides himself which I addressed to Aelius Tubero, in which I have, to the best of my ability, gone into all the points needing discussion, and have added suitable illustrations. But your view is that these writings lack precision, in that I do not give the proofs till I have specified the characteristics. You think that the exposition of characteristic peculiarities would gain in precision if, side by side with each single statement, I were to set down the expressions of the historian, as is the practice of the authors of rhetorical handbooks and introductions to the art of composition. Desiring, therefore, to meet every criticism, I have taken this course, and have followed the didactic method in place of the epideictic.

II

In order that the argument may be easy for you to follow, I will first quote word for word what I have previously said with regard to the historian, and will then cursorily review each several proposition, and will supply the illustrations as you desire. The passage about to be cited follows the remarks on Herodotus. 'Coming after Herodotus and the authors previously mentioned, and taking a comprehensive view of their several excellences, Thucydides aspired to form and to introduce into historical composition an individual manner of his own, one which was neither absolute prose nor down-right metre, but something compounded of the two. In the choice of words he often adopts a figurative, obscure, archaic and strange diction, in place of that which was in common use and familiar to the men of his day. He takes the greatest trouble to vary his constructions, since it was in this respect chiefly that he wished to excel his predecessors. At time he makes a phrase out of a word, at another time condenses a phrase into a word. Now he gives a nominal place of a verbal form, and again he converts a noun into verb. He inverts the ordinary use of nouns and verbs themselves, interchanging common with proper nouns and active with passive verbs. He varies the normal use of the plural and the singular number, and predicates the one in place of the other. He combines feminines with masculines, masculines with feminines, and neuter with the other genders; the natural agreement of gender is violated thereby. He shifts the cases of nouns or participles at times from the relation to the sense, at other times from the sense to the expression. In the employment of conjunctions and positions, and especially of the particles which serve to bring out the meanings of individual words, he allows himself poetic liberty. There will be found in him a large number of constructions which by changes of person and variations of tense, and by the strained use of expressions denoting person, differ from ordinary speech and have all the appearance of solecisms. Further, he frequently substitutes things for persons and persons for things. In his enthymemes and sentences the numerous parentheses often delay the conclusion for a long time, while there is much in him that is confused, involved, perplexed, and similarly defective. Moreover, not a few of the showy figures will be found to be employed by him,—I mean those parisoses, paromoeoses, paronomasiae and antitheses, which are so lavishly used by Gorgias of Leontini, by the school of Polus and Licymnius, and by many others, who flourished in his time. The most obvious of his characteristics is the attempt to indicate as many things as possible in as few words as possible, to combine many ideas in one, and to leave the listener expecting to hear something more. The consequence is that brevity becomes obscurity. In fine, there are four <sup>four</sup> “instruments,” so to say, of the style of Thucydides,—the artificial character of the vocabulary, the variety of the constructions, the roughness of the harmony, the speed of the narrative. Its “colours” are solidity, pungency, condensation, austerity, gravity, terrible vehemence, and above all his power of stirring the emotions. Such is Thucydides in respect of those characteristics of his style which distinguish him from all other writers<sup>1</sup>.

III

Examples of expressions which are obscure, and archaic, and puzzling to ordinary people are: τὸ ἀκραιφνές, ὁ ἐπιλογισμός, ἡ περιωπή, ἡ ἀνακωχή, and so forth. Of artificial words instances are: ἡ κωλύμη, ἡ πρέσβευσις, ἡ καταβοή, ἡ ἀχθηδών, ἡ δικαίωσις, and so on.

His novelty and variety in his constructions, and his departure from established usage, which we consider to be the chief point of difference between him and all other writers, may be illustrated by the following instances.

IV

When he amplifies a single idea and uses a number of nouns or verbs in place of one nominal or verbal expression, he expresses himself thus: 'Themistocles exhibited his natural force in the most convincing way, and in this respect he was especially worthy of admiration beyond any rival<sup>1</sup>.' Again, in the Funeral Speech he writes: 'nor yet on the score of poverty is a man who has it in his power to confer a service on the state debarred through the obscurity of his rank<sup>2</sup>.' For in these cases the sense** He expresses himself as in his description of the Spartan Brasidas when in the engagement at Pylus he was wounded and fell overboard. 'He fell,' he says, 'on to the παρεξίρρησσία, and his shield slipped off<sup>3</sup>.' What he means is: 'he fell overboard on to the projecting parts of the oars.'

V

When he gives the form of nouns to the verbal parts of speech, he expresses himself as follows. In his First Book the Corinthian envoy addresses the Athenians thus: 'such are the pleas for justice we can bring before you, together with the following exhortation and claim to gratitude<sup>4</sup>.' Here the verbs 'we can exhort' and 'we can claim' have been changed into the nouns 'exhortation' and 'claim.' Parallel expressions are 'the non-circumvallation of the Plemmyrium' in the Seventh Book, and 'the lamentation' which in the First Book he has mentioned in the course of a speech<sup>1</sup>. For to the verbs 'to circumvallate' and 'to lament' he has given the form of the nouns 'circumvallation' and 'lamentation.'

But when conversely he turns his nouns into verbs, he produces such an expression as we find in the First Book when the cause of the war is under discussion. 'The most real cause, though that which was least acknowledged, I consider to have been the fact that the growth of the Athenian power compelled them to wage war<sup>2</sup>.' His meaning is that the growth of the Athenian power caused a compulsion to the war. But for the nouns 'compulsion' and 'war' he has substituted the verbs 'to compel' and 'to wage war.'

VII

When he interchanges the passive and active forms of verbs, he writes in this fashion: 'for neither the one hinders by the truce nor the other<sup>3</sup>.' The active verb 'hinders' is employed in place of the passive 'is hindered.' The real meaning of the expression is: 'for neither the one is hindered by the truce nor the other.' And so also with the words found in his introduction: 'for in the absence of commerce, they did not mingle freely with one another<sup>4</sup>.' Here the active verb 'did

When instead of the active he uses the passive, he constructs a sentence of this kind: 'all of us who had by this time been brought into contact with the Athenians<sup>1</sup>.' His meaning is: 'all of us who dealt with the Athenians.' But he has used the passive form 'been brought into contact with' in place of the active 'dealt with.' And so with what next follows: 'those who had been settled more in the interior<sup>2</sup>.' For instead of the active verb 'who had settled' he has used the passive 'who had been settled.'

IX

As regards the distinction of singular and plural, he changes the two numbers about and uses singular for plural thus: 'and if perchance it occurs to some one that not he, but the Syracusan, is the enemy of the Athenian<sup>3</sup>.' He means Syracusans' and 'Athenians,' but he has put each of the proper names in the singular. Another instance is the passage: and we shall find the enemy more formidable, if his retreat is made difficult<sup>4</sup>.' Here he has put 'enemies' in the singular, not in the plural. Deviating in the same way from customary language, he uses the plural in place of the singular. This mode of expression will be found in the first part of the Funeral Speech: 'for eulogies bestowed on others are

Here the words 'each person' and 'hears' are singular, but the following words are put in the plural: 'but when this point is passed, they begin to feel envy and incredulity<sup>2</sup>.' * * Such expressions would naturally be used not of one person but of many.

Examples of the interchange of the three genders, in contravention of the ordinary rules of language, are such as these. He uses τάραχος in the masculine for ταραχή in the feminine, and similarly ἄχλος for ἄχλησις. In place of τὴν βούλησιν and τὴν δύναμιν he uses τὸ βουλόμενον and τὸ δυνάμενον. For instance, he says of the Athenians when they were considering the dispatch of their forces to Sicily: 'the Athenians were not robbed of their wishing (τὸ βουλόμενον) by the burden of the preparations<sup>3</sup>.' There is a similar instance in the passage in which he refers to the Thessalians: 'ὥστε εἰ μὴ δυναστεία μᾶλλον ἢ ἰσονομία ἐχρῶντο τῇ ἐπιχωρίῳ οἱ Θεσσαλοί.' Here he has made the feminine neuter. The real signification of the expression is: 'ὥστε εἰ μὴ δυναστεία μᾶλλον ἢ ἰσονομία ἐχρῶντο τῇ ἐπιχωρίῳ οἱ Θεσσαλοί.'

articles attached to them. He will then frame such a sentence as this: 'for the states, having obtained a tempered liberty and security in their undertakings, advanced towards downright freedom, scorning the "specious pretence of law and order" offered by the Athenians<sup>1</sup>.' Now writers whose syntax conforms to ordinary usage would have coupled the feminine form (sc. of the participle) with the feminine gender of the noun, and would have used the accusative instead of the genitive case as follows: 'σωφροσύνην γὰρ λαβοῦσαι αἱ πόλεις καὶ ἄδειαν τῶν πρᾶσσομένων ἐχώρησαν ἐπὶ τὴν ἀντικρυς ἐλευθερίαν, τὴν ἀπὸ τῶν Ἀθηναίων ὑπουλον εὐνομίαν οὐ προτιμήσασαι.' Whereas authors who construct masculines with feminines, as Thucydides has done, and use genitives instead of accusatives, would be said by us to be guilty of solecism. This is true also of the following words: 'καὶ μὴ τῷ πλήθει αὐτῶν καταπλαγέντες<sup>2</sup>.' The sentence ought to have been constructed not in the dative case but in the accusative: 'καὶ μὴ τὸ πλῆθος τῶν πολεμίων καταπλαγέντες.' Just as no one would be said 'τῇ παρὰ τῶν θεῶν ὀργῇ φοβεῖσθαι,' but rather 'τὴν τῶν θεῶν ὀργήν.'

Here ἐθέλομεν is a verbal form which indicates the future, while περιγίνεται indicates the present. The construction would have been regular if he had joined περιέσται with ἐθέλομεν. * * 'I consider the inaccessibility of the spot to be in our favour; but this helps us only if we stand our ground; if we retire, the position, though difficult in itself, will easily be mastered by the enemy<sup>2</sup>.' Now γίνεται refers to the present, but ἔσται to the future. The cases also are irregularly constructed. For he has put the participle μενόντων and the pronoun ἡμῶν in the genitive case, but ὑποχωρήσασιν in the dative. Whereas the latter should, more properly, have corresponded in case to the two former.

When he makes the transition from the sense to the expression or from the expression to the sense, he uses a construction of the following kind: 'the populace of the Syracusans were at great odds with one another<sup>3</sup>.' In his History things are treated as persons, as in the address of the Corinthians to the Lacedaemonians. The Corinthian speaker urges the leading men of the Peloponnese to maintain its prestige, in the eyes of external states, such as their fathers transmitted it to them. These are his words: 'You must, therefore, be well advised, and strive that the Peloponnese which you lead forth may be no less powerful than when your fathers left it to your care<sup>2</sup>.' He has used the expression 'to lead forth' in the sense 'to guide the Peloponnese outside as its leaders.' Now this could not apply to the territory, but it can apply to its glory and its power, and this is what he means to say.

Persons are transformed into things by him in the following way. When the same Corinthian envoy, addressing the Lacedaemonians, compares the characters of the Athenians and Lacedaemonians, he says: 'They are innovators and quick to conceive plans and to execute their resolves. But your alertness is directed to preserving what you have and to forming no fresh resolve, and to refraining even from the execution of what is absolutely essential<sup>3</sup>.' Now up to this point the construction is normal, the two persons forming its basis. But afterwards in the second clause the expression is changed, and instead of persons a thing is used in reference to the Lacedaemonians, when he says: 'and once more they are daring even beyond their power, and venturesome beyond their better judgment, and full of hope in the hour of danger ; but your way (τὸ δὲ ὑμέτερον) is to act below the measure of your power and to trust not even the safe conclusions of your judgment<sup>1</sup>. Here 'your way' is used instead of 'you,' a thing taking the place of a person.

In his enthymemes and sentences the parentheses are numerous and reach their conclusion with difficulty. This makes the meaning hard to follow. There are many of them in every part of the History ; but two only, taken from the Introduction, will suffice. One is the passage which shows the weakness of Primitive Greece and assigns the causes. 'For in the absence of commerce, they did not mingle freely with one another whether by land or over sea : each tribe possessing property enough of its own to support existence and having no superfluous goods ; none cultivating the land, for it was uncertain when some invader would come and rob them, as there were no fortifications to protect them : and feeling that they could command the bare means of subsistence everywhere alike, they readily migrated<sup>2</sup>.' If he had added the word 'readily migrated' to the first period and shaped it thus, 'In the absence of commerce they did not mingle freely with one another by land or by sea, but each tribe possessing enough property of its own to support existence, they migrated readily,' he would have made his meaning clearer, but by the insertion of many parenthetical clauses he has made it obscure and hard to follow. The second passage is that which refers to the invasion of Attica by Eurystheus. 'Eurystheus was slain in Attica by the Heracleidae. His maternal uncle was Atreus, to whom as being his kinsman Eurystheus entrusted the kingdom of Mycenae when he went to the wars. Atreus had been banished by his father because of the murder of Chrysippus. When Eurystheus failed to return, Atreus succeeded to the sovereignty over the Mycenaeans and over all others who had been under the rule of Eurystheus. He did so at the desire of the Mycenaeans, who feared the Heracleidae. He had also courted the multitude, and was thought to be a man of power<sup>1</sup>.'

XVI

The plan of his enthymemes is sometimes tortuous and involved and hard to unravel, as in the following passage of the Funeral Speech: 'They found a dearer delight in the punishment of their foes; danger thus incurred they considered the noblest of all, and wished to subordinate all other aims to that of vengeance. They committed the uncertainty of success to hope, but in action deemed it right to trust themselves as concerning what was now before their eyes. Thinking it right to suffer in self-defence rather than save their lives by submission, they escaped a shameful reputation by exposing themselves to the brunt of the fray; and in a moment of time they were removed, at the height of their fortune, from the scene of their glory rather than their fear<sup>2</sup>.' Of this kind also is the characterisation of Themistocles given by the historian in his First Book: 'For Themistocles exhibited his natural force in the most convincing way, and in this respect he was especially worthy of admiration beyond any rival. his native shrewdness, and unaided by knowledge acquired previously or at the time, he surpassed all others whether in judging present needs on the spur of the moment or in conjecturing the events of the most distant future. He had the power of explaining whatever he had in hand, and was well able to form a competent opinion of things of which he had no experience. He could foresee the better or worse course, while it was still in the dim future. In a word, through sheer natural capacity he could, however short the time for preparation might be, excel all men in improvising the right thing to be done<sup>1</sup>.

XVII

The affected figures of antithesis and paromoeosis and pariosis, in which Gorgias and his followers were particularly fertile, little become this style, which has an austere cast and is very far removed from preciousness. But instances of the following kind are found in the History of Thucydides: 'For it is clear that what is denominated Hellas now-a-days was not securely populated in ancient days<sup>2</sup>.' And again: 'They are daring beyond their power, and venturesome beyond their better judgment; but your way is to act below the measure of your power, and to trust not even the safe conclusions of your judgment, and to think you will never escape from the dangers that threaten you<sup>3</sup>.' Another instance will be found in the passage in which he describes, in the following terms, the calamities which had overtaken Greece in consequence of party-spirit: 'For reckless audacity was considered loyal courage; cautious hesitation was specious cowardice; moderation was the cloak of unmanliness; universal wisdom was general ineffectiveness<sup>4</sup>.' Many passages of this kind will be

NOTES.

Throughout the Notes and Glossary references are given to the lines as well as to the pages of the text of the Three Letters, e.g. 68 14. The abbreviation π. ψ. (περὶ ὑψους) = Longinus on the Sublime.

FIRST LETTER TO AMMAEUS.

The greater part of such notes as are required for the First Letter to Ammaeus can be most conveniently presented in the form of a Chronological Table. References to lines and pages of the Letter are given in the case of events dated by Dionysius himself.

Table of Dates in the Lives of Demosthenes and Aristotle.

ἀναγκαία πρὸς ταῦτα ἢ τῶν χρόνων διάγνωσις.

Dionys. de Dinarcho c. 9.

Olympiad and Archon	B.C.
99, 1. Diotrephe	384	Birth of Aristotle, 60 14. Birth of Demosthenes.  This is the date now generally accepted for the birth of Demosthenes: see A. Schaefer, Dem. u. seine Zeit i. 269 n. 2. The date assigned by Dionysius (56 19) is 381 B.C. He expressly says (60 15) that Aristotle was τρισὶν ἔτεσι Δημοσθένους πρεσβύτερος.
99, 3. Evander	382	Birth of Philip of Macedon.
103, 2. Polyzelus	367	Aristotle comes to Athens, 60 17.

Olympiad and Archon	B.C.
104, 1. Timocrates	364	In this archonship Demosthenes, according to Dionysius (58 20), entered upon his seventeenth year. In the lacuna marked on 58 21, Dionysius possibly assigned the Speeches against Aphobius to this period.
104, 3. Molon	362	Against Onetor.
105, 2. Eucharistus	359	Callicles, Conon , etc. (approximate date)
106, 1. Elpines	356	Birth of Alexander.
106, 2. Callistratus	355	Against Androtion , 58 21—24. Against the Law of Leptines , 58 1.
106, 3. Diotimus	354	On the Navy Boards , 58 5.
106, 4. Thudemus	353	Against Timocrates , 58 12. For the Megalopolitans , 58 13.
107, 1. Aristodemus	352	Against Aristocrates , 58 18. First Philippic , 58 15.  "Dionysius of Halicarnassus is mistaken in placing the First Philippic earlier than the Aristocrates , though he is right in assigning both speeches to the same year, Ol. 107, 1 (352—1 B.C.)." Sandys, First Philippic and Olynthiacs of Demosthenes , p. 7.
107, 2. Theellus	351	For the Rhodians , 58 20.  Probably this speech should rather be dated some two years earlier (S. H. Butcher Demosthenes pp. 43, 44; J. B. Bury History of Greece p. 880).
107, 3. Apollodorus	350	For Phormion , etc.
107, 4. Callimachus	349	Olynthiacs I, II, III : 58 24.  Dionysius arranges (58 26—60 1) the three Olynthiacs in the order II, III, I. The point at issue is fully discussed by Sandys op. cit. pp. lxiii—lxvii. See also ad Amm. i. c. 9. Cp. schol. Demosth. or. Olynth. ii. init. p. 71, 1 Dind. τοῦτον (τὸν λόγον) Διονύσιος προτάττει τῶν Ὀλυνθιακῶν, ἀρχοντας τέ τινας καταλέγων καὶ ἐκ τοῦ προοιμίου πιστούμενος ἐκ περιχαρείας ληφθέντος. Κακίλιος δὲ ἀντιλέγει πρῶτον ἀξιῶν τὸν πρῶτον νομιζόμενον. τὸ μὲν οὖν κατὰ τοὺς ἀρχοντας ἐν ἱστορίᾳ κείται καὶ ἴσως οὐκ ἀκριβῆ τὸν ἐλεγχον ἔχει, τὸ δὲ κατὰ τὸ προοίμιον οὐκ ἀτάρκες εἰς ἀπόδειξιν.
108, 1. Theophilus	348	Against Meidias , 60 2. Aristotle upon the death of Plato leaves Athens, proceeding to Atarneus, which was ruled by Hermias, 60 19. Fall of Olynthus, 70 18.

Olympiad and Archon	B.C.
108, 2. Themistocles	347	'Fifth of Demosthenes' Speeches against Philip,' 70 20. By the fifth speech Dionysius means Philipp. i. 30 ff. On his division of the First Philippic into two parts, see Sandys, First Philippic and Olynthiacs of Demosthenes , pp. 101, 102.
108, 3. Archias	346	On the Peace , 72 2.
108, 4. Eubulus	345	Aristotle retires to Mytilene, 60 21.
109, 1. Lyciscus	344	Second Philippic , 72 4 ('the seventh of the speeches against Philip').
109, 2. Pythodotus	343	Aristotle with Philip, as Alexander's tutor, 60 22. (Hegesippus) On Halonnesus , 72 9 ('the eighth of the speeches against Philip'). On the Embassy , 72 11.
109, 3. Sosigenes	342	On the Chersonese , 72 14 ('the ninth of the speeches against Philip'). Third Philippic , 72 20 ('the tenth of the speeches against Philip').
109, 4. Nicomachus	341	[Demosth.] Fourth Philippic , 72 22 ('the eleventh of the speeches against Philip'). Dionysius clearly regards this and the next-mentioned speech as genuine.
110, 1. Theophrastus	340	[Demosth.] Orat. ad Philippi Epist. 1., 72 29 ('the last of the speeches against Philip'). End of Philip's convention with the Athenians, 74 23.
110, 2. Lysimachides	339	Philip sends ambassadors to Thebes, 78 29.
110, 3. Chaerondas	338	Battle of Chaeroneia.
111, 1. Pythodemus	336	Alexander succeeds Philip.
111, 2. Evaenetus	335	Aristotle returns to Athens and teaches in the Lyceum, 60 25.
112, 3. Aristophon	330	On the Crown , 82 5. Victory of Alexander at Arbela, 82 7.
113, 4. Anticles	325	Demosthenes accused of corruption, 84 18.
114, 2. Cephisodorus	323	Death of Alexander, 60 27.
114, 3. Philocles	322	Death of Demosthenes. Death of Aristotle, 62 1.

For summary of this letter, see p. 25 supra. For Ammaeus, p. 38 supra and Classical Review xiv. p. 440.

52 16 Kiessling (Rhein. Mus. xxiii. 254) supports his reading καὶ τῶν ἡθῶν ἔνεκα καὶ τῶν λόγων by the apt quotation of Dionys. Hal. de Thucyd. c. 52, τῆς ἐπιεικείας, ἣ κεκρήμεθα καὶ περὶ τοὺς λόγους καὶ περὶ τὰ ἥθη.

52 19 In the older texts of Dionysius, this and the following lines have been re-written as follows: ἡ μαθὼν ὅτι προτεροῦσι τῶν Δημοσθένους λόγων αἱ Ἀριστοτέλους τέχναι, ἐκὼν μεταδοξάσω· ἡ τοῦναντίον φωράσας τὴν δόξαν ἣν πρότερον αὐτὸς ἔσχον βεβαιώσω καὶ τὸν ἄλλως ἐγνωκότα κτλ. Reiske (vi. 1130) suggests: ἵνα ἡ τὴν δόξαν, ἣν πρότερον αὐτὸς ἔσχον βεβαιώσω, ἐγὼ, μαθὼν ὅτι.....

54 20 See p. 41 supra.

56 4 The words here quoted had become proverbial. They formed the commencement of the famous palinode (Plat. Phaedr. 243 A) of Stesichorus:—

οὐκ ἔστ' ἔτυμος λόγος οὗτος·
οὐδ' ἔβας ἐν ναυσὶν εὐσέλμοις, οὐδ' ἴκεο πέργαμα Τροίας.

58 1 περὶ τῶν ἀτελειῶν, i.e. Πρὸς Λεπτίνην.

58 4 οἱ τοὺς ῥητορικοὺς πίνακας συντάξαντες: cp. p. 42 supra.

58 17 φυγαδικῶν τριηρῶν: the Greek seems to suggest the sense "galleys manned by refugees" rather than "flying squadron." But the words used by Demosthenes (Philipp. i. 25) are ταχείας τριήρεις δέκα. Possibly γαδικῶν is an old corruption of ταχειῶν.

58 20 Θεέλλος, not Θεσσαλός, is the name of this archon: cp. Corp. Inscr. Att. ii. 1, 43.

58 23 τοῦ τρίτου. The Greek inclusive reckoning: the date of Callimachus being 349 B.C., of Theellus 351 B.C.

60 2 συνετάξατο seems to imply that Demosthenes wrote, but did not deliver, the speech Against Meidias. The reference in χειροτονίαν is to the vote of censure for contempt of the festival (ἀδικεῖν περὶ τὴν ἑορτήν) passed upon Meidias by the public assembly.

60 10 Dionysius' authority in c. 5 may have been the Chronica of Apollodorus, for whom see W. Christ Gesch. der griech. Litteratur p. 608, and Pauly-Wissowa i. 2857.

62 12 The Μεθοδικά is included by Diogenes Laert. in his list of the works of Aristotle. It was probably a logical treatise. It is mentioned again in c. 8, and in the passage which is quoted from the Rhetoric in c. 7.

62 20 By 'instruction' (διδασκαλία) Aristotle means exact or demonstrative proof. The sense here is, 'to speak with scientific accuracy is the part of one who is conveying instruction in the science.'

62 24 ἐντευξίς = 'intercourse,' 'way of dealing with': cp. Ar. Metaph. iii. 5, 1009 A, ἔστι δ' οὐχ ὁ αὐτὸς τρόπος πρὸς πάντας τῆς ἐντευξέως· οἱ μὲν γὰρ πειθοῦς δέονται, οἱ δὲ βίας.

64 2 Mr Mathews suggests, with much force, that the text given by Dionysius should stand [with the exception of τὸ δὲ φαινόμενον φαινόμενος συλλογισμός, which words may have arisen from an insertion at the wrong place of the questionably Aristotelian τὸ δὲ φαινόμενος συλλογισμός, a corruption due to ἡ φαίνεσθαι δείκνυσθαι], the general meaning of the passage being: "And inasmuch as rhetoric is demonstrative (or ostensibly demonstrative), therefore just as in the analytical theory [formal logic] part is induction, and part deduction, so also here: for argument by analogy is a kind of induction, and argument supported by reasons is a kind of deduction: in fact, I call 'enthymeme' rhetorical syllogism, and 'example' rhetorical induction. Everyone who tries to carry conviction does so by demonstration, adducing examples or reasoned arguments, and in no other way: so if we grant that every demonstration is of necessity either inductive or deductive (and this is clear from the Analytics), it must be that each [ἐκάτερον, not ἑκάστον] division of the one subject is identical with one division of the other (i.e. the difference between theory and practice is only formal, and the essential divisions of each must agree)."

66 17 Dionysius has in mind Agathon's lines as quoted in Arist. Rhet. ii. 24:—

τάχ' ἂν τις εἰκὸς αὐτὸ τοῦτ' εἶναι λέγοι, βροτοῖσι πολλὰ τυγχάνειν οὐκ εἰκότα.

Cp. article on 'Aristophanes and Agathon' in Journal of Hellenic Studies xx. pp. 44—56.

66 20 For full notes on this and the other passages quoted from Aristotle's Rhetoric by Dionysius in the course of this Letter, reference may be made to Cope's commentary (revised and edited by Dr J. E. Sandys). For κατ' ἀναλογίαν ('by analogy or resemblance,' 'proportionally'), see Ar. Poetics xxi. 7, where metaphors are defined and subdivided: μεταφορὰ δὲ ἐστὶν ὀνόματος ἀλλοτρίου ἐπιφορὰ ἢ ἀπὸ τοῦ γένους ἐπὶ εἶδος ἢ ἀπὸ τοῦ εἶδους ἐπὶ τὸ γένος ἢ ἀπὸ τοῦ εἶδους ἐπὶ εἶδος ἢ κατὰ τὸ ἀνάλογον.....τὸ δὲ ἀνάλογον λέγω, ὅταν ὁμοίως ἔχῃ τὸ δεύτερον πρὸς τὸ πρῶτον καὶ τὸ τέταρτον πρὸς τὸ τρίτον.

The comparison here attributed to Pericles is not found in the Funeral Oration as given in the second book of Thucydides; possibly it was used by Pericles on another similar occasion (but cp. Cope, Aristotle's Rhetoric i. 145, 146). Dionysius (or his manuscripts) omits the words "so Leptines said, with reference to the Lacedaemonians, that he would not have the Athenians look calmly on when Greece was robbed of one of her eyes," for which words see Cope iii. 112.—The conjecture ἄγχοντα (cp. Ael. de Nat. Animalium x. 48, εἰς πνίγμα ἄγχων) seems to account for both ἀγαγόντα and ἔχοντα.

68 6 Philochorus: flor. 306—260 B.C. For his History of Attica, see W. Christ, Gesch. d. griech. Litt.<sup>3</sup> pp. 553, 554; for the Atthides generally, Müller F. H. G. i. lxxi ff., 359 ff.

68 10 The hiatus of eighteen letters at this point is not recognised in BPs. Possibly, as A. Schaefer suggests (Dem. u. seine Zeit ii.<sup>2</sup> p. 132 n. 1), the name of the proposer has fallen out, e.g. Δημοσθένους γράψαντος.

70 7 τρεῖς δὲ Ἑλληνικάς. The three speeches thus indicated are: On the Symmories, For the Megalopolitans, and For the Rhodians. They bore the title 'Hellenic,' in contradistinction to those against Philip.—The five speeches to which reference is made in the following clause are the Androtion, Leptines, Meidias, Aristocrates, Timocrates.

74 9 ἐν τῇ πρὸς Ἀρμόδιον, sc. δίκη or ἀπολογία. This case is also known as ἡ περὶ τῆς εἰκόνης δίκη. It belongs to the year 371 B.C., and turns on the award of a statue to Iphicrates in honour of his defeat of the Spartan mora in 392 B.C. The grant was opposed by Harmodius, a descendant of the famous liberator, against whom Iphicrates defended himself. The speech Iphicrates delivered was, according to some critics, composed by Lysias; but this view Dionysius rejects, in the de Lysia c. 12, on grounds of style and chronology. Aristotle here appears to attribute it to Iphicrates himself.

78 10 It is worth special remark that the manuscripts of Dionysius, as well as those of Demosthenes, give συμπενεσόντων ἡμῶν ἄν.

80 23 "This is the only place in which the name of Demosthenes appears in Aristotle's Rhetoric. See on this subject Introd.

[i.e. Cope's Introduction to Aristotle's Rhetoric] pp. 45, 46, and note 2. In ii. 23, 18, a few words of his are quoted, but without the author's name. The Demosthenes mentioned in iii. 4, 3 is probably not the great orator." Cope, Aristot. Rhet. ii. p. 316.

82 11 ἐντετευχώς: the form ἐντετυχηκώς is found in de adm. vi dic. in Dem. c. 13.

84 1 After τοιοῦτον the passage runs thus in Aristot. Rhet. ii. 23, 3: καὶ οὐδὲν κωλύει, ὥσπερ ἐν τῷ Ἀλκμαίωνι τῷ Θεοδέκτου μητέρα δὲ τὴν σὴν οὗ τις ἐστύγει βροτῶν;

The point is that it was not for Alcmaeon, her son, to slay Eriphyle, even though she had caused the death of his father.

84 3 καὶ οἶον ἢ περὶ.....Νικάνορα. "This is cited by Dion. Halicarn., Ep. i. ad Amm. c. 12, as a proof that Aristotle was acquainted with and quoted the speeches of Demosthenes, referring it to the case (against Aeschines) for the Crown. In doing so he omits περὶ. Of course ἢ περὶ Δημοσθένους δίκη cannot have this meaning: and it is most probable that it is not the orator that is here referred to, but Thucydides' general, or some other person of the name. Neither is anything known of Nicanor and his murderers," Cope, Aristot. Rhet. ii. p. 244. It seems probable that the words καὶ τῶν ἀποκτεινάντων Νικάνορα have been wrongly repeated in the text of Dionysius. In the original passage of the Rhetoric it has sometimes been thought that Νικόδημον should be read in place of Νικάνορα (cp. A. Schaefer, Dem. u. s. Zeit. ii. 104 n. 4).

84 17 περὶ τῆς τῶν δώρων. For the ellipse, cp. 74 9 supra. Dionysius did not believe (cp. de adm. vi dic. in Dem. c. 57) in the genuineness of an ἀπολογία τῶν δώρων attributed to Demosthenes.

92 24 With εἰς τὴν ὑπόθεσιν cp. a passage in the Phaedrus 269 which Dionysius may have had in mind: κινδυνεύει, ὃ ἄριστε, εἰκότως ὁ Περικλῆς πάντων τελεώτατος εἰς τὴν ῥητορικὴν γενέσθαι—For the Λόγος Ἑρωτικός and the question of its genuineness, see Sandys Orat. xiv. n. 3, and *Jebb Att. 96 15 ἐν τῇ περὶ τῶν Ἀττικῶν πραγματείᾳ ῥητόρων: p. 6 supra.

96 17 The points in which this quotation differs from the original in de adm. vi dic. in Dem. cc. v—vii. deserve attention because of the light they throw on Dionysius' views of exact reproduction.

96 19 καθάπερ εἰρηταί μοι πρότερον: probably in the lost portion of the de adm. vi dic. in Dem.

98 4 The semi-poetical word αὔρα, which occurs again at the end of c. 4, may well be a reminiscence of Plato: ἵνα ὥσπερ ἐν ὑγιεινῷ τόπῳ οἰκοῦντες οἱ νέοι ἀπὸ παντὸς ὠφελῶνται, ὁπόθεν ἂν αὐτοῖς ἀπὸ τῶν καλῶν ἔργων ἢ πρὸς ὄψιν ἢ πρὸς ἀκοήν τι προσβάλη ὥσπερ αὔρα φέρουσα ἀπὸ χρηστῶν τόπων ὑγίειαν, καὶ εὐθὺς ἐκ παιδῶν λανθάνῃ εἰς ὁμοιότητά τε καὶ φιλίαν καὶ ξυμφωνίαν τῷ καλῷ λόγῳ ἀγούσα. Plat. Rep. iii. 401 c.

98 22 καὶ πολὺς ὁ τελέτης (= τελεστής, ‘mystery-monger’) ἐστὶν ἐν τοῖς τοιοῦτοις παρ’ αὐτῷ. This remarkable expression may be illustrated by the following passages: πολὺ τὸ παθητικὸν ἐν ἐκείνοις εἶναι δεῖ.....πᾶς ὁ τῶν τοιούτων σχημάτων κόσμος πολὺς ἐστὶ παρ’ αὐτῷ, de Isocr. c. 2. τούτων γὰρ τῶν λήρων ἱερεὺς ἐκεῖνος ἀνὴρ, de Comph. c. 4. ἦκειν ἐπὶ τὰς τελετὰς τοῦ λόγου, ibid. c. 25 (quoted on p. 19 supra).

102 4 The passage which immediately follows the words εἰληφε τὸ βυβλίον in de adm. vi dic. in Dem. c. 7 is: ἐν γὰρ δὴ τῷ συγγράμματι τοῦτ' πολλὴν μὲν ὥραν ἔχει καὶ χαρίτων ἐστὶ μεστὰ τὰ πρῶτα ταυτί· “ὦ φίλε Φαῖδρε, ποῖ δὴ καὶ πόθεν; Παρὰ Λυσίου, ὃ Σώκρατες, τοῦ Κεφάλου. πορεύομαι δὴ πρὸς περίπατον ἔξω τείχους. συχνὸν γὰρ ἐκεῖ διέτριψα χρόνον καθήμενος ἐξ ἑωθινοῦ μέχρι τῆς ἀναγνώσεως τοῦ Λυσιακοῦ λόγου καὶ μετὰ τὴν ἀνάγνωσιν ἕως τινός. εἴθ', ὥσπερ ἐξ ἀέρος εὐδίου καὶ σταθεροῦ πολὺς ἄνεμος καταρραγείς, ταραττεῖ τὸ καθαρὸν τῆς φράσεως ἐς ποιητικὴν ἐκφύρων ἀπειροκαλίαν, ἐνθὲνδ' ἀρξάμενος· “Ἀγετε δὴ, Μοῦσαι, εἴτε δι' ᾧδῆς ἴδος λέγεται εἴτε διὰ γένος τὸ Λιγύων μουσικὸν ταύτην ἔσχετε τὴν ἐπωνυμίαν, ξύμ μοι λάβεσθε τοῦ μῦθου.” ὅτι δὲ ψόφοι ταῦτ' εἰσὶ καὶ διθύραμβοι, κόμπων ὀνομάτων πολλὴν νοῦν δὲ ὀλίγον ἔχοντες, αὐτὸς ἐρεῖ. διεξιὼν γάρ, ἀφ' ἧς αἰτίας ἔρως ἐτέθη τῷ πάθει τοῦνομα, καὶ τῇδε χρῆσάμενος· “Ἢ γὰρ ἄνευ λόγου δόξης ἐπὶ τὰγαθὸν ὁρμώσης κρατήσασα ἐπιθυμία, πρὸς ἡδονὴν ἄγουσα κάλλους καὶ τῶν ἐαυτῆς συ-γενῶν ἐπιθυμιῶν, ἐπὶ σωματίων κάλλος ἔρρωμένως ῥωσθεῖσα νικήσας ἀγωγὴ ἀπ' αὐτῆς τῆς ῥώμης ἐπωνυμίαν λαβοῦσα ἔρως ἐκλήθη· καὶ τοσαύ-την ἐκμηκύνας περίφρασιν ὀλίγοις τοῖς ὀνόμασι δυναμένου περιληφθῆναι πράγματος ἐπιλαμβάνεται τῆς ἀκαιρίας τῆς αὐτὸς αὐτοῦ καὶ φησι· 'Σιγῇ τοῖνυν μου ἄκουε. τῷ ὄντι γὰρ θεῖος εἶναι εἰσικεν ὁ τόπος. ὥστ' εἰαν ἄρα πολλάκις νυμφόληπτος γένωμαι προιόντος τοῦ λόγου, μὴ θαυμάσης. τὰ νῦν γὰρ οὐκέτι πόρρω διθυράμβων τινῶν φθέγγομαι.' "For in this composition the opening words have great beauty and are full of charm. 'My dear Phaedrus, whither pray are you going, and when come you?—I have come from Lysias the son of Cephalus Socrates, and am going for a walk outside the walls. For I have spent a long time at his house, and have been sitting down since early morning.' The whole passage is of the same kind till the reading of the speech of Lysias, and after that up to a certain point

Then as though some great storm were to burst from a calm and cloudless sky, he mars the purity of the diction and rushes into tasteless and poetic language, beginning thus: 'Come, O ye Muses, melodious (λίγεια) as ye are called, whether you have received this title from the character of your song, or because the Ligyans (Λιγύων) are a musical race, with me in the story join!' Plato himself will tell us that these are noisy dithyrambs, full of high-sounding words but signifying little. For he proceeds to seek the cause why Love was the name assigned to the emotion in question, and gives the following explanation: 'The irrational desire which overmasters the tendency of opinion towards what is right, and leads to the enjoyment of beauty and of the desires, the desires which are her own kith and kin,—this desire, I say, marching victoriously against personal beauty is vigorously invigorated and from this very vigour receives the title of Love (ῥώμη, ἔρως).' And having described in this lengthy periphrasis a thing that could have been put in a few words, he assails his own want of sobriety and says: 'Listen to me, then, in silence; for in very truth the place seems sacred; so that you must not be surprised if perchance, as the discussion proceeds, I am seized with frenzy, for even my present utterance attains to something like a dithyrambic strain.'—After the above excerpts from the Phaedrus (227 A, 237 A, 238 B, 238 D: with sundry divergencies of reading) there follows this comment: <τάδ' οὐχ ὑπ' ἄλλων, ἀλλὰ τοῖς αὐτῶν λόγοις ἀλίσκόμεθα <κατὰ τὴν τραγωδίαν, δαιμονιώτατε Πλάτων, διθυράμβων ψόφους καὶ λήρους ἡγαπηκότες.

How much of this passage of the de adm. vi dic. in Demosth. was reproduced in the Ep. ad Cn. Pomp. we cannot tell. It is possible that the loss is due to the similarity of opening in the sentences ἐν γὰρ δὴ τῷ συγγράμματι κτλ. and ἐν γὰρ τούτοις κτλ.

For the aesthetic point, cp. Thompson's edition of the Phaedrus, p. 25: "It is to this part of the dialogue that Aristotle alludes, Rhet. iii. 7, 11, where he says that a high-flown poetical diction is admissible in prose, (1) when the feelings of the audience have been wrought to a high pitch by the speaker, or (2) when such style is adopted μετ' εἰρωνείας, ὅπερ Γοργίας ἐποίει, καὶ τὰ ἐν τῷ Φαίδρῳ. This criticism, for its taste and discernment, stands in favourable contrast with that of Dionysius Halic., who is sorely scandalized by the 'turbid and obscure, and disagreeably poetical style' which, as he thinks, is a grievous change for the worse from the gracefulness of the introductory scene."

102 9 Cp. Diog. Laert. iii. 37, φησὶ δ' Ἀριστοτέλης τὴν τῶν λόγων ἰδέαν αὐτοῦ μεταξὺ ποιήματος εἶναι καὶ πεζοῦ λόγου. Quintil. Inst. Orat. x. 1, 81 "multum enim supra prosam orationem et quam Graeci pedestrem vocant surgit: ut mihi non hominis ingenio sed quodam Delphico videatur oraculo instinctus." Grote, Plato i. 213.

104 10—16 Cp. pp. 27, 28, 38 supra.

104 21—24 Cp. Antiq. Rom. i. 1, (δεῖ) πρῶτον μὲν ὑποθέσεις αἰρεῖσθαι καλὰς καὶ μεγαλοπρεπεῖς, καὶ πολλὴν ὠφέλειαν τοῖς ἀναγνωσμένοις φερούσας.

106 3 By the words καὶ ἅπερ αὐτὸς εἶρηκε Dionysius wishes to indicate that the opening of the History of Herodotus is familiar to all: Ἡροδότου Ἀλικαρνησέος ἱστορίας ἀπόδεξις ἦδε· ὡς μῆτε τὰ γενόμενα ἐξ ἀνθρώπων τῷ χρόνῳ ἐξίτηλα γίνηται, μῆτε ἔργα μεγάλα τε καὶ θωυμαστά, τὰ μὲν Ἕλλησι, τὰ δὲ βαρβάροις ἀποδεχθέντα, ἀκλεᾶ γίνηται· τὰ τε ἄλλα καὶ δι' ἣν αἰτὴν ἐπολέμησαν ἀλλήλοισι.

106 27, 28 Both Hellanicus and Charon had written histories entitled Περσικά: see W. Christ, Gesch. der griech. Litt.<sup>3</sup>, pp. 324, 5. Charon, Pauly-Wissowa, iii. pp. 2179, 2180.

108 23 ff. Cp. de Thucyd. c. 16, ὦν προνοούμενος ἔοικεν ἀτελῇ τὴν ἱστορίαν καταλιπεῖν, ὡς καὶ Κράτιππος ὁ συνακμάσας αὐτῷ καὶ τὰ παραλειφθέντα ὑπ' αὐτοῦ συναγαγὼν γέγραφε, οὐ μόνον ταῖς πράξεσιν αὐτὰς ἐμποδὼν γεγενῆσθαι λέγων, ἀλλὰ καὶ τοῖς ἀκούουσιν ὀχληρὰς εἶναι.

110 1 τοῖς ἀκούουσιν. Cp. p. 33 n. 1 supra, and Plin. Ep. v. 8, 11, "nam plurimum refert, ut Thucydides ait, κτῆμα sit an ἀγώνισμα; quorum alterum oratio, alterum historia est."

114 1 The division here suggested is something of the following kind:—

I. ἀρεταὶ ἀναγκαῖαι, viz.

- (1) ἡ καθαρὰ τοῖς ὀνόμασι καὶ τὸν Ἑλληνικὸν χαρακτήρα σφύζουσα.
- (2) συμφήνεια.
- (3) συντομία.

II. ἀρεταὶ ἐπίθετοι, viz.

- (1) ἐνάργεια.
- (2) ἡ τῶν ἡθῶν τε καὶ παθῶν μίμησις.
- (3) αἱ τὸ μέγα καὶ θαυμαστὸν ἐκφαίνουσαι τῆς κατασκευῆς ἀρεταί (e.g. ὕψος, καλλιρρημοσύνη, σεμνολογία, μεγαλοπρέπεια).
- (4) αἱ τὴν ἰσχὺν καὶ τὸν τόνον καὶ τὰς ὁμοιοτρόπους δυνάμεις τῆς φράσεως ἀρεταὶ περιέχουσai (e.g. βάρος, τὸ ἔρρωμένον, τὸ ἐναγώνιον).
- (5) ἡδονὴ καὶ πειθῶ καὶ τέρψις (τέρψις = χάρις, ἀφροδίτη) καὶ αἱ ὁμοιογενεῖς ἀρεταί.
- (6) πασῶν ἐν λόγοις ἀρετῶν ἡ κυριωτάτη τὸ πρέπον (perhaps this virtue should be placed in a class of its own).

Cp. de Thucyd. c. 23, τὰς μὲν οὖν ἀναγκαίας ἀρετὰς ἡ λέξις αὐτῶν πάντων ἔχει (καὶ γὰρ καθαρὰ καὶ σαφὴς καὶ σύντομός ἐστιν ἀποχρώντως, σφύζουσα τὸν ἴδιον ἐκάστη τῆς διαλέκτου χαρακτήρα)· τὰς δ' ἐπιθέτους, ἐξ ὧν μάλιστα διάδηλος ἡ τοῦ ῥήτορος γίνεται δύναμις, οὔτε ἀπάσας οὔτε εἰς ἄκρον ἡκούσας, ἀλλ' ὀλίγας καὶ ἐπὶ βραχὺ, ὕψος λέγω καὶ καλλιρρημοσύνην καὶ σεμνολογίαν καὶ μεγαλοπρέπειαν· οὐδὲ δὴ τόνον οὐδὲ βάρος οὐδὲ πάθος διεγείρον τὸν νοῦν οὐδὲ τὸ ἔρρωμένον καὶ ἐναγώνιον πνεῦμα, ἐξ ὧν ἡ καλουμένη γίνεται δεινότης. Ernesti, Lexicon Technolog. Graecorum Rhetoricae, p. 16: “ἀναγκαίας ἀρετὰς τῆς λέξεως, Dionys. Iud. Thuc. 22. p. 862 appellat eas elocutionis virtutes, quas in omnibus sermonibus adhiberi oportet, quales sunt, puritas, perspicuitas, brevitās. His contrariae sunt ἀρεταὶ ἐπίθετοι, adiectitiae, in quibus cernitur artificium et vis oratoria, ut sublimitas, elegantia, gravitas, magnificentia, adfectuum notatio etc. quas enumerat ipse cap. 23. p. 865. Sic Plut. in Cat. 18 τοῖς περιτοῖς τὰ ἀναγκαῖα ὀππονίτ.” id. ib. p. 123: “ἐπίθετος φράσις, quae eadem est κατεσκευασμένη, elaborata, arte facta, ornamentis oratoriis instructa.”

114 5 The second point in the comparison between Herodotus and Thucydides has been lost. That it was σαφήνεια is clear from de Vet. Cens. (de Imitat.), p. 425 R. (Us. p. 22: see next note but two): τῆς σαφηνείας δὲ ἀναμφισβητήτως Ἡροδότῳ τὸ κατόρθωμα δέδοται.

114 28 Caccilius, p. 37 supra.

116 1, 2 Cf. the passages quoted p. 176 infra from Marcellinus Vit. Thucyd.; and Demetrius π. ἐρμ. 215 (of Ctesias), καὶ ὅλως δὲ ὁ ποιητὴς οὗτος· ποιητὴν γὰρ αὐτὸν καλοῖη ἂν τις εἰκότως· ἐναργείας δημιουργός ἐστιν ἐν τῇ γραφῇ συμπάσῃ.

116 7 With the foregoing passage may be compared de Imit. ii. c. 3, 1 (Us. pp. 22, 23): τῶν μέντοι συγγραφέων Ἡρόδοτος μὲν ἐξείργασται βέλτιον τὸ πραγματικὸν εἶδος· τῷ δὲ λεκτικῷ ποτὲ μὲν πλεονεκτεῖ Θουκυδίδης, ποτὲ δὲ ἔμπαλιν· ἔστιν δ' ἐν οἷς ἐξισούνται. τῇ μὲν γὰρ ἀκριβείᾳ τῶν ὀνομάτων, ἧς ἑκάτεροι προήρηνται διαλέκτου, ἀποσφύζουσι τὸ ἴδιον· τῆς σαφηνείας δὲ ἀναμφισβητήτως Ἡροδότῳ τὸ κατόρθωμα δέδοται. καὶ τὸ μὲν σύντομον ἔστι παρὰ Θουκυδίδῃ, τὸ δὲ ἐναργὲς παρὰ ἀμφοτέροις. ἐν μέντοι τοῖς ἠθικοῖς κρατεῖ ὁ Ἡρόδοτος, ἐν δὲ τοῖς παθητικοῖς ὁ Θουκυδίδης. πάλιν καλλιλογίᾳ καὶ μεγαλοπρεπείᾳ διαφέρουσιν οὐδὲν ἀλλήλων, ἀλλ' ἑκάτεροι τούτων τε καὶ τῶν τοιούτων ἀρετῶν κρατοῦσι. βῶμῃ δὲ καὶ ἰσχύι καὶ τόνῳ καὶ τῷ περιττῷ καὶ πολυσχηματίστῳ παρηνδοκίμησε Θουκυδίδης· ἡδονῇ δὲ καὶ πειθοῖ καὶ χάριτι καὶ τῷ [ἀφελεί] αὐτοφνεῖ [ἀβασανίστῳ] μακρῷ διενεγκόντα τὸν Ἡρόδοτον εὐρίσκομεν· ὃς καὶ μετὰ τούτων τὸ πρέπον <περὶ> πραγματείαν καὶ προσωποποιῶν μᾶλλον συντετήρηκεν.

περὶ ὧν καὶ ἕτερος ἔσται καιρός. It is probable that these words refer chiefly to the de Thucyd. and the ad Amm. ii.

116 8 With chapters iv. and v. may be compared de Imit. ii. c. 3, 2 (Us. pp. 23—25).

116 12 It is to be noted that the Vita Agesilai is not mentioned in the following short list of Xenophon's historical writings.

116 14 A true Eikon Basilike, in fact.

116 17 Possibly the original reading was τὴν ἱστορίαν ἦν, with a gloss Ἑλληνικὴν.

118 3 The enumeration of qualities is somewhat fuller in de Imit. ii. c. 3, 2: ἐκλεκτικὸς μὲν γὰρ καὶ καθαρὸς τοῖς ὀνόμασι, καὶ σαφὴς καὶ ἐναργής, καὶ κατὰ τὴν σύνθεσιν ἡδὺς καὶ εὐχαρις, ὥς καὶ πλείον ἔχειν, κ.τ.λ.

118 10 It is probable that some words introducing the topic of τὸ πρέπον have dropped out between σβέννυται and μακρότερος.

118 14 Philistus: cp. π. ὕψ. p. 237. Cic. Ep. ad Quintum Fratrem ii. 13, 4 (Tyrrell ii. 116): "Siculus ille capitalis, creber, acutus, brevis, paene pusillus Thucydides, sed utros eius habueris libros (duo enim sunt corpora) an utrosque nescio. me magis de Dionysio delectat. ipse est enim veterator magnus, et per familia Philisto Dionysius." Cic. de Orat. ii. 13, 56: "Hunc (sc. Thuc.) consecutus est Syracosius Philistus, qui, cum Dionysii tyranni familia-issimus esset, otium suum consumpsit in historia scribenda, maximeque Thucydidem est, sicut mihi videtur, imitatus." Wilkins' notes on the last passage should be consulted.

120 2 In the parallel passage of de Imit. ii. c. 3, 2 σεμνότης is also specified: οὐ μὴν ὁμοίως (sc. ἀπεμάξατο) τὴν καλλιλογίαν καὶ τὴν σεμνότητα καὶ τὴν ἀφθονίαν τῶν ἐνθυμημάτων, κτλ.

120 14—16 More fully in de Imit. l.c.: μικρὸς δὲ ἐστὶ καὶ ταπεινὸς κομιδῇ ταῖς ἐκφράσεσιν ἥτοι τόπων ἢ ναυμαχιῶν ἢ πεζῶν παρατάξεων ἢ οἰκισμοῦ πόλεων.

120 23 Theopompus: cp. de Imit. ii. c. 3, 3. See also π. ὕψ. p. 242. Quintil. Inst. Orat. x. 1, 74: "Theopompus his (sc. Herodoto et Thucydidi) proximus ut in historia praedictis minor, ita oratori magis similis, ut qui, antequam est ad hoc opus sollicitatus, diu fuerit orator." Cic. de Orat. ii. 13, 57 (with Wilkins' notes): "postea vero ex clarissima quasi rhetoris officina duo praestantes ingenio, Theopompus et Ephorus ab Isocrate magistro impulsu se ad historiam contulerunt; causas omnino nunquam attigerunt."

120 26 Χιακός. A. Schaefer Dem. u. seine Zeit iii. 306, n. 2.

122 3, 4 W. Christ, Gesch. d. griech. Litt. p. 362: "Seine beiden grossen historischen Werke waren die Hellenika in 12 B., welche, an Thukydides anknüpfend, die Geschichte von 410—394 oder bis zur Schlacht von Knidos behandelten, und die Philippika in 58 B., welche die Regierung des Königs Philippos von Makedonien zum Mittelpunkt hatten, aber in zahlreichen und ausgedehnten Digressionen die ganze Zeitgeschichte umfassten; so enthielten dieselben 3 Bücher sikilische Geschichte (Diod. 16, 71), eine Musterung der Demagogen Athens, einen Abschnitt wunderbarer Geschichten (im 10 B.), einen Exkurs über die aus Delphi geraubten Schätze."

122 27 καὶ τέλη. "Fort. καὶ ἥθη, vel καπιτηδεύματα. Vulgata certe lectio ferri nequit," Herwerden, p. 44. But cp. Kaibel Hermes xx. p. 510: "Memnon schrieb (sicherlich im ersten Jahrhundert nach Christus) die Geschichte seiner Vaterstadt Heraklea mit dem besonderen Zweck die πράξεις, ἥθη, βίαι und τέλη der dortigen Tyrannen zu schildern. Dieser moralische Zweck unterschied ihn von seiner Quelle Nymphis; er wird dadurch dem Plutarch ähnlicher als irgend einem Historiker."

124 16 διὸ καὶ βάσκανος κτλ. Cp. Luc. de hist. conscrib. 59, καὶ τὴν αὐτὴν Θεοπόμπῃ αἰτίαν ἔξεις φιλαπεχθιμόνως κατηγοροῦντι τῶν γλείστων καὶ διατριβὴν ποιουμένων τὸ πρᾶγμα, ὥς κατηγορεῖν μᾶλλον ἢ στροφεῖν τὰ πεπραγμένα.

126 8 τῆς τε συμπλοκῆς κτλ. The reference is to Theopompus' excessive anxiety to avoid hiatus. Cp. Cic. Orat. 151: "in quo uidam Theopompum etiam reprehendunt, quod eas litteras (sc. ocales) tanto opere fugerit." Quintil. Inst. Orat. ix. 4, 35: "nimiosue non immerito in hac cura putant omnes Isocratem secutos, raecipueque Theopompum."

SECOND LETTER TO AMMAEUS.

Summary, p. 30 supra. Ammaeus, p. 38 supra and Classical Review xiv. p. 440.

130 12 Aelius Tubero, p. 34 supra and Classical Review xiv. p. 441.

132 4 τὸ διδασκαλικὸν σχῆμα λαβὼν ἀντὶ τοῦ ἐπιδεικτικοῦ. Usener and Radermacher, against the authority of P 1741 and all other manuscripts, change ἐπιδεικτικοῦ into ἀποδεικτικοῦ. But Ammaeus did not desire the ἀποδείξεις ('demonstrations,' 'illustrations,' p. 130, l. 13) of the de Thucydide to be dropped; he merely wished that the illustrations should follow close upon the special point to be illustrated. Dionysius himself in the de Thucyd. c. 25 (the chapter immediately following the long passage quoted in ad Amm. ii. c. 2) clearly defines the method he intends to follow in that treatise: προειρημένων δὲ τούτων κεφαλαιωδῶς ἐπὶ τὰς ἀποδείξεις αὐτῶν ὥρα γέρεσθαι. ποιήσομαι δὲ οὐ χωρὶς ὑπὲρ ἐκάστης ἰδέας τὸν λόγον, ὑποτάττων αὐταῖς τὴν Θουκυδίδου λέξιν, ἀλλὰ κατὰ περιοχάς τινας καὶ τόπους, μέρη λαμβάνων τῆς τε διηγήσεως καὶ τῶν ῥητορειῶν καὶ παρατιθεὶς τοῖς τε πραγματικοῖς καὶ τοῖς λεκτικοῖς κατορθώμασιν ἢ ἁμαρτήμασι τὰς αἰτίας, δι' αἷς τοιαῦτα ἐστι. He prefers, that is, to treat his subject in the epideictic style of an essayist, rather than in the disjointed manner of a schoolmaster who must care more for paedagogic effectiveness than for literary form. Compare also de adm. vi dic. in Dem. c. 46: παραδειγμάτων δ' οὐκ οἶμαι δεῖν ἐνταῦθα, ἵνα μοι μείζονα πίστιν ὁ λόγος τῶν ἔργων τοῖς ῥήτορος ἐξεταζομένων, εἰ τοιαῦτά ἐστιν, οἷα λέγω. πολὺ γὰρ <ἂν> ἢ σύνταξις τὸ μῆκος λάβοι, καὶ δέος, μή ποτε εἰς τοὺς σχολικοὺς ἐκβῇ χαρακτῆρας ἐκ τῶν ὑπομνηματισμῶν, and *de Comp. 132 19 Cp. Marcellinus Vit. Thucyd. 56, ποικιλώτατος μὲν ἐν τοῖς τῆς λέξεως σχήμασι, κατὰ δὲ τὴν διάνοιαν τοῦναντίον ἀσχημάτιστος.—Dionysius here omits (see critical footnote) the question of the 'composition' of Thucydides, which he treats fully in de Comp. c. 22.

134 18 Winifred Warren, American Journal of Philology, xx. p. 317: "τοπικῶν is the reading of the manuscripts here and in the De Thucyd. Iudicium. Krüger wrote τροπικῶν, and has been followed by van Herwerden and Usener. It seems possible, however, to keep the manuscript reading and understand a reference to Thucydides' proleptic use of prepositions and adverbs of place, e.g. ii. 5, 29; v. 52, 11. This is favoured by the coupling with χρόνων."

136 1 Cp. Marcell. 36, ἐξήλωσε δ' ἐπ' ὀλίγον, ὥς φησιν Ἀντυλλος, καὶ τὰς Γοργίων τοῦ Λεοντίνου παρισώσεις καὶ τὰς ἀντιθέσεις τῶν ὀνομάτων εὐδοκίμουσας κατ' ἐκεῖνο καιροῦ παρὰ τοῖς Ἑλλησι, καὶ μέντοι καὶ Προδίκον τοῦ Κείου τὴν ἐπὶ τοῖς ὀνόμασιν ἀκριβολογίαν.

136 5 Cp. Marcell. 56, ὀλίγοις ὀνόμασι πολλὰ πράγματα δηλῶν: 50, αἱ δὲ βραχύτητες θαυμασταὶ καὶ τῶν λέξεων οἱ νόες πλείονες: 53, μέλει δὲ αὐτῷ.....βραχύτητος συντάξεως.

136 11. Cp. F. Smith and F. D. Wolcott, will be found in the Transactions and Proceedings of the American Philological Association (years 1891, 1894, 1898).

136 14 ἐμβριθές: cp. Marcell. 50, τὸ δὲ τῆς συνθέσεως τραχύτητος δν] μεστόν καὶ ἐμβριθὲς καὶ ὑπερβατικόν, ἐνίοτε δὲ ἀσαφές: 56, ἐμβριθὲς ἦν φράσιν.

136 19—23 ἀκραυφνές. Thucyd. i. 19, μετὰ ἀκραυφνοῦς τῆς συμμάχους (schol. ὅτε εἶχον ἀβλαβῇ τὴν τῶν πάντων συμμαχίαν): i. 52, ῥοσγεγενημένας τε ναῦς ἐκ τῶν Ἀθηνῶν ἀκραυφνεῖς (schol. ἀβλαβεῖς, κεραιοφαιεῖς).

ἐπιλογισμός. This word does not occur in our text of Thucydides, nor is it one which would be likely to be considered obscure by Dionysius, who himself uses the corresponding verb ἐπιλογίζομαι in Ep. ad Pomp. c. 1. Usener suggests that the word written by Dionysius was ἐπηλύτης (Thucyd. i. 9: cp. Marcell. 52).

περιωπή. Thucyd. iv. 87, οὕτω πολλὴν περιωπὴν τῶν ἡμῶν ἐς τὰ ἰερίστα διαφόρων ποιοῦμεθα, where the schol. explains ἀντὶ τοῦ περιεκεψιν ἢ περιάθρησιν ἢ πρόνοιαν ἢ ἐξέτασιν. Cp. Phot. Lex. p. 425, 13: περιωπή καὶ πισύνη καὶ πύστις πάντα ταῦτα γλωττώδη παρὰ Δουκυδίῃ. καλεῖ δὲ περιωπὴν τὴν φροντίδα καὶ τὴν περίσκεψιν, οὗ τὸν ὅπον ὡς Ὅμηρος.

ἀνακωχή. Thucyd. i. 40, Κερκυραίοις δὲ οὐδὲ δι' ἀνοκωχῆς πώποτ' γένεσθε. Here and elsewhere (i. 66, iii. 4, iv. 38, 117, v. 25, 26, 32, iii. 87) in Thucydides the correct form seems to be ἀνοκωχή. But ἀνακωχή was used by Dionysius and the grammarians. Cp. schol. on Thucyd. l.c., ἀνακωχή ἐστὶν εἰρήνη πρόσκαιρος, πόλεμον ὠδίνουσα, οἷον ἡ κρὰ τοῦ πολέμου ἀνάβλησις, παρὰ τὸ ἄνω ἔχειν τὰς ἀκωκὰς τῶν δορατῶν.

κωλύμη. Thucyd. i. 92, οὐδὲ γὰρ ἐπὶ κωλύμῃ ἀλλὰ γνώμῃ παραινεῖσι ἦθεν τῷ κοινῷ ἐπηρεσεύσαντο. Schol. κωλύμη] κωλύσει. ἰδία δὲ ἡ ἐξὶς Θουκυδίδου. Cp. Marcell. 52, τὰ δ' ἰδία, οἷον ἀποσίμωσις καὶ κωλύμη καὶ ἀποτείχισις, καὶ ὅσα ἄλλα παρ' ἄλλοις μὲν οὐ λέλεκται, παρὰ οὕτω δὲ κεῖται. The word occurs also in Thucyd. iv. 27, 63.

πρέσβευσις. Thucyd. i. 73, ἡ μὲν πρέσβευσις ἡμῶν οὐκ ἐς ἀντιλογίαν τοῖς ὑμετέροις ξυμμάχοις ἐγένετο, ἀλλὰ περὶ ὧν ἡ πόλις ἐπεμψεν· αἰσθανόμενοι δὲ καταβοὴν οὐκ ὀλίγην οὔσαν ἡμῶν κτλ. Schol., ὅτι πρέσβευσις [καὶ καταβόησις] καὶ καταβοή οὐ λέγεται εἰ μὴ ἰδίᾳ παρὰ Θουκυδίδῃ. Cp. Gregorius Corinthius de dial. Att. 14, p. 50 Schaef., οἱ Ἀττικοὶ τὴν πρεσβείαν πρέσβευσιν λέγουσι καὶ τὴν καταβόησιν καταβοὴν [καὶ τὴν ἀγάπην ἀγάπησιν] καὶ μᾶλλον ὁ Θουκυδίδης.

καταβοή (for καταβολή of the mss.). See Thucyd. i. 73 (as quoted above), viii. 85, 87.

ἀχθηδών. Thucyd. iv. 40, δι' ἀχθηδόνα: schol., διὰ λύπην. So Hesychius, ἀχθηδόνα: λύπην ὀδύνην βάρος. The word is found also in Thucyd. ii. 37. As Mr Rouse suggests, ἀχθηδών might be paralleled by the Old English teen, καταβοή by garboil, πρέσβευσις by ambassage, κωλύμη by let, ἀνακωχή by warstay, etc.

δικαίωσις. Cp. schol. Thucyd. i. 141, δικαίωσις: κέλεις πρόσταξις: iii. 82, δικαίωσει δὲ ἀντὶ τοῦ τῇ ἑαυτῶν δικαίᾳ κρίσει: v. 17, δικαίωσις: αἰτήματα δίκαια: viii. 66, δικαίωσις ἀντὶ τοῦ κόλασις ἢ εἰς δίκην ἀπαγωγὴ ἥτοι κρίσις. The word occurs also in iv. 86.

138 5—7 The point specially criticised by Dionysius seems to be the use of the periphrasis ἦν δηλώσας for ἐδήλωσεν. Possibly also, as Usener suggests, he thinks that the whole sentence might have run more compactly thus: βεβαιότατα γὰρ ὁ Θεμιστοκλῆς φύσεως ἰσχὺν δηλώσας μᾶλλον ἑτέρου ἄξιος ἦν θανμάσαι. The words ἐς αὐτὸ are explained by the schol. in Thucyd. i. 138 as = εἰς τὴν ἰσχὺν τῆς φύσεως.

138 10 It seems best, for the reasons indicated below, to assume a lacuna here, and to regard καὶ μὴν as introducing a second instance of periphrasis. Usener would read τὸ σύντομον in place of τὸ σημαινόμενον, but "apart from the fact that κατὰ πενίαν is scarcely more concise than πένης μὲν ὧν, the transition from periphrasis to brachylogy is made through καὶ μὴν alone; an example is introduced before the statement of that which it illustrates; and the passage violates the usage of the writer, since ποιεῖ τὸν λόγον and similar expressions are throughout the epistle used with a personal subject. There seems to be no doubt that there is a lacuna after τὸ σημαινόμενον; for (save here) up to the long citations in chapters xv. and xvi., Dionysius uniformly points out the particulars in which he criticises the passages quoted, and gives what is in his view a more natural rendering." (Winifred Warren, American Journal of Philology, xx. p. 318.)

138 13 Thucyd. iv. 12, καὶ ὁ μὲν τοὺς τε ἄλλους τοιαῦτα ἐπέσπερχε καὶ τὸν ἑαυτοῦ κυβερνήτην ἀναγκάσας ὀκεῖλαι τὴν ναὺν ἐχῶρει ἐπὶ τὴν ἀποβάθραν. καὶ πειρώμενος ἀποβαίνειν ἀνεκόπη ὑπὸ τῶν Ἀθηναίων, καὶ τραυματισθεὶς πολλὰ ἐλτιποσύχησέ τε καὶ πεσόντος αὐτοῦ ἐς τὴν παρεξαιρεσίαν ἢ ἀσπίς περιερρύη ἐς τὴν θάλασσαν κτλ. For παρεξαιρεσία, cp. schol. on Thucyd. iv. 12, παρεξαιρεσία ἐστὶν ὁ ἔξω τῆς εἰρεσίας τῆς νεῶς τόπος καθ' ὃ μέρος οὐκ ἐτι κώπαις κέχρηται· ἐστὶ δὲ τοῦτο τὸ ἀκρότατον τῆς πρύμνης καὶ τῆς πρῶρας, and on vii. 34, παρεξαιρεσία ἐστὶ τὸ κατὰ τὴν πρῶραν πρὸ τῶν κωπῶν, ὡς ἂν εἴποι τις τὸ παρὲξ τῆς εἰρεσίας. Dionysius evidently regards the use of παρεξαιρεσία as an instance of excessive brevity. He seems to imply that Thucydides used παρεξαιρεσία to mean not τὸ παρὲξ τῆς εἰρεσίας (the part clear of the oars, i.e. either end of the ship), but rather as a brachylogy for ἐκτὸς παρὰ τὴν εἰρεσίαν.

The same passage of Thucyd. is quoted by Demetrius, de Elocutione 65, with a somewhat different purpose: τὸ μεγαλεῖον μέντοι ἐν τοῖς σχήμασι τὸ μηδὲ ἐπὶ τῆς αὐτῆς μένειν πτώσεως, ὡς Θουκυδίδης, καὶ πρῶτος ἀποβαίνων ἐπὶ τὴν ἀποβάθραν ἐλτιποσύχησέ τε, καὶ πεσόντος αὐτοῦ ἐς τὴν παρεξαιρεσίαν· πολλὴ γὰρ οὕτω μεγαλειότερον, ἢ εἴπερ ἐπὶ τῆς αὐτῆς πτώσεως οὕτως ἔφη, ὅτι ἔπescen εἰς τὴν παρεξαιρεσίαν καὶ ἀπέβαλε τὴν ἀσπίδα.

138 17—23 Cp. schol. on the passage in question (Thucyd. i. 41): τὸ παραινέειν καὶ ἀξιοῦν ῥήματα ὄντα ὀνοματικῶς προήνεγκεν.

138 24. The words ἣ τε οὐκ ἀποτείχισις τοῦ Πλημμυρίου are not to be found in Thucydides. They seem to be a confused recollection of the following passages: μετὰ δὲ τῆς Ποτειδαίας τὴν ἀποτείχισιν (Thucyd. i. 65), διὰ τῆς Λευκάδος τὴν οὐ περιτείχισιν (iii. 95), ἣ τοῦ Πλημμυρίου λῆψις (vii. 24).

140 1 ὀλόφυρσις occurs in Thucyd. i. 143 and ii. 51. That the former is the passage here meant, is clear from the words ἐν δημηγορίᾳ.

140 17 The manuscripts of Thucydides give ἐν ταῖς σπονδαῖς. With or without ἐν, κωλύει seems to be used impersonally: "there is no hindrance to the one, or to the other, in [or, by] the treaty." Cp. Aristoph. Av. 463 (quoted by Forbes ad Thucyd. i. 144): ὃν διαμάττειν οὐ κωλύει.

140 23 Cp. schol. ad Thucyd. i. 2, ἐπιμυγνύντες: ἐπιμυγνύμενοι.

142 7 Cp. schol. ad Thucyd. i. 120, ἐηλλάγησαν ἀντὶ τοῦ συνέμψαν καὶ ὠμίλησαν.

142 14 Cp. Dionys. de Thucyd. c. 48 (with reference to the same passage of Thucydides), καὶ ἔτι τὸ κατακορὲς τῆς μεταγωγῆς <τῆς> ἔκ τε τοῦ πληθυντικοῦ εἰς τὸ ἐνικὸν καὶ ἐκ τοῦ περὶ προσώπων λόγου εἰς τὸ τοῦ λέγοντος πρόσωπον.

144 5 Cp. schol. ad Thucyd. ii. 35, ἀπιστοῦσιν: λείπει ἕκαστος. ἔστι δὲ σχῆμα.

144 9 τέραχος is not found in our present texts of Thucydides. But it was probably read by Dionysius in one or more of the following passages: Thucyd. ii. 84, iv. 75, vii. 80, viii. 42.

144 10 ὄχλον. The passage in question is Thucyd. i. 73, εἰ καὶ δι' ὄχλον μᾶλλον ἔσται αἰεὶ προβαλλομένοις. Elsewhere in Thucydides, who uses the word some twenty-six times in all, ὄχλος bears its usual sense of 'crowd.' Cp. Phot. Lex. p. 366, 9, ὄχλος· τὸ πληῆθος. καὶ τὴν ὄχλησιν. Hesychius, ὄχλον· ἐνόχλησιν.

144 11, 12 τὸ βουλόμενον.....τὸ δυνάμενον. τὸ βουλόμενον is found in Thucyd. i. 90 and vii. 49, but not in the passage (Thucyd. vi. 24) actually quoted, where the manuscripts give τὸ μὲν ἐπιθυμοῦν τοῦ πλοῦ and the schol. adds the explanation ἡγουν τὴν ἐπιθυμίαν. Possibly Dionysius himself wrote ἐπιθυμοῦν and the copyists have brought this into formal agreement with τὸ βουλόμενον above. τὸ δυνάμενον is absent from our texts of Thucydides, but it may have stood in ii. 97, ὁμως δὲ κατὰ τὸ δύνασθαι (schol. διὰ τὴν δύναμιν) ἐπὶ πλέον αὐτῷ ἐχρήσαντο.—Cp. Antiph. Orat. v. 73, κρεῖσσον δὲ χρή γίγνεσθαι αἰεὶ τὸ ὑμέτερον δυνάμενον ἐμὲ δικαίως σφύζειν ἢ τὸ τῶν ἐχθρῶν βουλόμενον ἀδίκως με ἀπολλύναι.

144 17 The manuscripts of Thucyd. (iv. 78) give τὸ ἐγχώριον, used adverbially (schol. ἐγχωρίως). The ancient grammarians would no doubt explain τῷ ἐπιχωρίῳ as "the national thing (constitution)," comparing such passages as Thucyd. ii. 47, ἡ νόσος πρῶτον ἤρξατο γενέσθαι τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις, λεγόμενον μὲν καὶ πρότερον πολλαχόσε ἐγκατασκῆψαι (schol. θηλυκῶς ἡ νόσος, τὸ δὲ λεγόμενον ὡς πρὸς τὸ νόσημα ὑπῆντησεν. Suid. ii. 1, p. 1007, νόσος λεγόμενον ἐγκατασκῆψαι: πρὸς τὸ σημαίνομενον ἢ σύνταξις· πρᾶγμα δηλονότι. παρὰ Θουκυδίδῃ), and Odyss. xii. 74, νεφέλῃ δὲ μιν ἀμφιβέβηκε | κυανῇ· τὸ μὲν οὐπὸς ἐ<ρωέει>.

146 2—15 For a discussion of this passage, of the reading in Thucyd. viii. 64, and of Dionysius' general habits of quotation, reference may be made to Classical Review xiv. pp. 244—246, 'Dionysius of Halicarnassus as an Authority for the Text of Thucydides.'

146 19 It is curious that, in his own use of the verb ἐκπλήττεσθαι, Dionysius seems to contradict the rule he here lays down with regard to καταπλήττεσθαι. In the de Thucyd. c. 30 he quotes τοὺς ἐναντίους ἐπεπληγμένους from Thucydides. But in ad Pomp. 88 11 he writes γάρ τις ἄλλος ἐκπλήττεται ταῖς Πλατωνικαῖς ἐρμηνείαις, and in Isocr. c. 8 καρτερεῖν δὲ τὰ δεινὰ καὶ μὴ ἐκπλήττεσθαι ταῖς συμφοραῖς. Evidently he does not in these passages regard ἐκπλήττεσθαι as synonym for θαυμάζειν or φοβεῖσθαι, but presses the original force of the verb—'to be struck with admiration by,' 'to be struck with awe by.'

146 24 In Thucyd. ii. 39 ἐθέλομεν is supported by AB<sup>2</sup>EFm<sup>2</sup>g as well as Dionysius; ἐθέλομεν by CG.

148 15 Cp. schol. ad Thucyd. iv. 10, ὑποχωρήσασι δέ: ὑποχωρηάντων δὲ καίπερ δυσέμβατον ὃν εὐεπίβατον γενήσεται τοῖς Λακεδαιμονίοις.

148 20 Cp. Gregorius Cor. de dial. Att. 27 p. 71, ἔθος αὐτοῖς μὴ ποδιδόναι τὴν σύνταξιν πρὸς τὴν φωνήν, ἀλλὰ πρὸς τὸ σημαινόμενον. ουκυνδίδης ἐν τῷ τρίτῳ τῆς συγγραφῆς [iii. 79]. τῇ δ' ὕστεραίᾳ ἐπὶ μὲν ἣν πόλιν οὐδὲν μᾶλλον ἐπέπλεον, καίπερ ἐν πολλῇ ταραχῇ καὶ φόβῳ τας, where the schol. explains ἐπὶ μὲν τὴν πόλιν by κατὰ τῆς πόλεως γουν τῶν πολιτῶν.

150 15 Cp. Marcell. 53, τέθεικε δὲ πολλάκις καὶ πάθη καὶ πράγματα ντ' ἀνδρῶν, ὡς τὸ ἀντίπαλον δέος (iii. 11).

152 5 Cp. Marcell. 56, ἀσαφὴς τὴν διάνοιαν διὰ τὸ ὑπερβατοῖς αἰρεῖν: 50, τὸ δὲ τῆς συνθέσεως...ὑπερβατικόν, ἐνίοτε δὲ καὶ ἀσαφές.

152 17 οὐ χαλεπῶς ἀνίσταντο. The opening passage of Thucydides (i. 1, 2), up to and including these words, is quoted and discussed by Dionysius, de Comp. Verb. c. 22.

154 2 In the English translation of this and the remaining illustrative extracts from Thucydides, it has not seemed necessary as the Greek original is printed on the opposite page) to make an elaborate attempt to reproduce those peculiarities of construction which are criticised by Dionysius.—"The change of subject and the departure from chronological order appear clumsy. But Thucydides is not telling the old legend over again for its own sake; he is marking emphatically the circumstances which favoured Atreus—'Eurystheus was dead—Atreus was his uncle—Eurystheus had Mycenae in charge of Atreus. Now Atreus had come to Mycenae because he had been compelled to fly from Pisa,' etc." Forl Thucyd. i. 9 (note on).

156 21 Cp. Dionys. de Thucyd. c. 29, παρομοιώσεις γὰρ ἀμφὸς ταῦτα καὶ παρισώσεις περιέχει, καὶ τὰ ἐπίθετα καλλωπισμοῦ χάριν καὶ and schol. ad Thucyd. iii. 82, τὸ δὲ φιλέταιρος παρελκόντως καὶ κέχρηται δὲ αὐτῷ διὰ τὸ προσθεῖναι τόλμαν ἀλόγιστον, ἵνα παρίστω γένηται.—From the modern point of view, the style of Thucydides has been analysed and estimated by M. Alfred Croiset, Thucydide Livres i—ii. pp. 102 ff. and Histoire de la littérature grecque pp. 155 ff.; as well as by Professor Blass Att. Ber. i. 201—227.

GLOSSARY OF RHETORICAL AND GRAMMATICAL TERMS.

IN this Glossary of the chief rhetorical and grammatical terms found in the Three Literary Letters, we are not directly concerned with the general question of the language and style of Dionysius. But it may be useful to give a reference to the chapter headed "Die sprachlichen und stilistischen Grundsätze des Dionysius von Halikarnass," in W. Schmid's Der Atticismus in seinen Hauptvertretern von Dionysius von Halikarnass bis auf den zweiten Philostratus, i. pp. 1—26. In accordance with his own precepts, Dionysius aims at simplicity and directness of style, though occasionally he loses himself in the labyrinths of a period. In his use of words he is, often and necessarily, extremely technical. He is, nevertheless, anything but a pedantic writer. He discerns that the waters of language remain fresh only if fed perpetually from the springs. Holding that the language of literature should, where necessary, draw fearlessly on the language of ordinary life (cp. pp. 10, 15, 47 supra), he is himself often most vivid, graphic, and (we are tempted to say) modern. Examples of this freshness will have been noticed in the Three Letters, and in various passages quoted in the course of the Introductory Essay. A couple of instances may be added here. He speaks (de Thucyd. c. 30) of 'hardening' one's style (σκληραγωγῶν,—as though a delicate child were in question); and again in reference to style, he refers to the gift of knowing when to 'take occasion by the hand' (οὐδὲ τὸν καιρὸν αὐτῆς ἐπίσταται λαβεῖν δεξιῶς, de adm. vi dic. in Dem. c. 10).

The copiousness of the technical vocabulary of Dionysius may be judged from the fact that this Glossary, somewhat lengthy as it is, is confined strictly to words occurring in the Three Literary Letters.

ἀγωγή. ad Amm. ii. 156 12. Cast of style. Cp. de Isocr. c. 15, de Isaeo cc. 18, 20, de adm. vi dic. in Dem. cc. 2, 23, 36, 42, 44, de Comp. c. 23. Also used by Dionysius of training (de Isocr. c. 1, de Thucyd. c. 50, de Comp. c. 1), and of a mode in music (de Comp. c. 19).

ἀγών. ad Amm. i. 54 8, 54 23 (ἀγωνισταὶ λόγων ῥητορικῶν), 56 12, 66 2, 80 8, 80 25, 82 14, 84 20. ad Pomp. 120 22. Contests, or speeches delivered in political and judicial contests. τοὺς ἀληθινούς ἀγῶνας = 'real contests or debates': cp. Cic. Brut. 316 "(Molonem) actorem in veris caussis scriptoremque praestantem." With ἀγωνισταὶ ('fighters, combatants, athletes') cp. de Isaeo c. 20, ἀγωνιστὴς δὲ λόγων οὔτε συμβουλευτικῶν οὔτε δικανικῶν ἐστι. The adj. ἐναγωνίως occurs in de Isaeo c. 20, de adm. vi dic. in Dem. cc. 30, 45. For the distinction between the γραφικὴ λέξις and the ἀγωνιστικὴ λέξις cp. Aristot. Rhet. iii. 12, 1, οὐ γὰρ ἡ αὐτὴ γραφικὴ (sc. λέξις) καὶ ἀγωνιστικὴ, οὐδὲ δημηγορικὴ καὶ δικανικὴ, i.e. the literary is not identical with the controversial style, nor the political with the forensic.

αἰτιατικὴ (πτῶσις). ad Amm. ii. 146 8, 146 14. Accusative case.

ἀκατάλληλος. ad Amm. ii. 148 11. Lacking in correspondence or symmetry; irregular. Cp. de adm. vi dic. in Dem. c. 27, διὰ μακροῦ τε γὰρ καὶ ἀκατάλληλον καὶ οὔτε δεινότητα ἔχον οὔτε σύνταξιν.

ἀκολουθία. ad Amm. ii. 134 10, 134 23. Sequence.

ἀκριβής. ad Pomp. 96 24, 100 9, 100 19. Of style: exact, precise. Cp. the use of the corresponding verb in ad Pomp. 114 26, ἀκριβέως μᾶλλον, 'gives a finer finish to': also de Comp. c. 23, ἀκριβοῦν τὴν ἀρμονίαν. In ad Pomp. 114 4, ταύτην ἀκριβοῦσιν ἀμφοτέροι, the reference is to the διάλεκτος καθαρὰ καὶ ἀκριβής, which Aristotle demand from writers of Greek.

ἀλληγορία. ad Pomp. 98 18. Allegory, covert meaning. For criticisms of the allegories of Plato, cp. π. ὕψ. c. 32, ἐπὶ γὰρ τοῦτοις καὶ τὸν Πλάτωνα οὐχ ἥκιστα διασύρουσι, πολλάκις ὥσπερ ὑπὸ βακχείας τινὸς τῶν λόγων εἰς ἀκράτους καὶ ἀπηνεῖς μεταφορὰς καὶ εἰς ἀλληγορικὸν στόμφον ἐκφερόμενον. See also Glossary ibid. p. 194. Demetr. de Eloc. 99, μεγαλείον δέ τί ἐστι καὶ ἡ ἀλληγορία, καὶ μάλιστα ἐν ταῖς ἀπειλαῖς, οἷον ὡς ὁ Διονύσιος, ὅτι οἱ τέττιγες αὐτοῖς ἄσσονται χαμόθεν.

ἀναλογία. ad Pomp. 98 17. Analogy, proportion. Cp. Aristot. Rhet. iii. 10, 7 (as quoted by Dionysius in ad Amm. i. 66 20). The reference is to the analogy, proportion, or point of contact, in the terms of μεταφοραί. Cp. note on pp. 165, 166 supra.

ἀνάπαυσις. ad Pomp. 110 8. Pause.

ἀντίθεσις. ad Amm. ii. 136 2, 156 9 (ἀντίθετον : concrete). Antithesis : 'the opposition of words or of ideas, or of both, in the two corresponding clauses of a sentence' (Jebb, Att. Or. i. 98 n. 1). See also under παρίσσωσις, p. 199 infra.

ἀντικατηγορεῖν. ad Amm. ii. 134 8. To predicate one thing of another, use one in place of the other.

ἀντιμετάταξις. ad Amm. ii. 144 7. Grammatical term : interchange (of genders). Lat. commutatio.

ἀντονομαστικός. ad Amm. ii. 148 13. Pronominal. ἀντονοματικόν (the reading of P) seems to point to this form rather than to ἀντωνυμικόν or ἀντωνυματικόν.

ἀπαγγέλλειν. ad Amm. i. 58 13, 58 21, 70 14, 70 21, 74 3. To deliver a speech : cp. διατίθεμαι infra.

ἀπαιροκαλία. ad Pomp. 100 16, 98 12 (ἀπειρόκαλος). Tastelessness, vulgarity : especially as shown in the misuse of ornament. Cp. Norden, Antike Kunstprosa i. 363 n. 2, ii. 559.

ἀπηρχαιωμένος. ad Amm. ii. 132 17, 136 18. Archaic, antiquated, obsolete. So also in de Isocr. c. 2, de Thucyd. c. 50.

ἀπίθανος. ad Amm. i. 66 14. Unconvincing, improbable.

ἀποίητος. ad Pomp. 96 21, 100 9. Natural, not artificial. Cp. de Lysia c. 8, δοκεῖ μὲν γὰρ ἀποίητός τις ὁ τῆς ἁρμονίας αὐτοῦ χαρακτήρ.

ἀποστρέφειν. ad Amm. ii. 134 12, 148 20, 150 1, 150 23. To cause to pass, e.g. from one construction to another. So ἀποστροφή, 'transition,' 134 17, 148 17. Cp. π. ὕψ. p. 195.

ἀποτείνειν. ad Pomp. 98 10. To lengthen out : of redundant style. Possibly both the verbs, in the phrase ἔλκει τε μακρὸν ἀποτείνουσα τὸν νοῦν, derive their meaning from one or other of the technical uses of ἔλκειν and ἀποτείνειν described in H. Blümner's Technologie und Terminologie der Gewerbe und Künste bei den Griechen und Römern.

ἄρθρον. ad Amm. ii. 146 1. Article. Cp. [Aristot.] Poetics c. 20, τῆς δὲ λέξεως ἀπάσης τὰδ' ἐστὶ τὰ μέρη, στοιχείον συλλαβὴ σύνδεσμος ἄρθρον ὄνομα ῥῆμα πτώσις λόγος, and Dionys. Hal. de Comp. c. 2, οἱ δὲ μετ' αὐτοὺς γενόμενοι, καὶ μάλιστα οἱ τῆς Στωϊκῆς αἰρέσεως ἡγεμόνες, ἕως τεττάρων προὔβιβασαν, χωρίσαντες ἀπὸ τῶν συνδέσμων τὰ ἄρθρα. Two things follow from these passages : (1) the Stoics were the probable authors of the separation of 'article' from 'conjunction'; (2) the term 'article' must originally, and possibly in the time of Dionysius, have been used in a comprehensive way, ἄρθρον ὑποτακτικόν being = pronomén relativum. Cp. Dionysius Thrax, Art Grammatica p. 61 (ed. Uhlig): ἄρθρον ἐστὶ μέρος λόγου πτωτικόν, προτασσόμενον καὶ ὑποτασσόμενον τῆς κλίσεως τῶν ὀνομάτων, i.e. an 'article' is an inflected part of speech, preceding or following [according as it is ὁ or ὅς] the case of the noun it is connected with.

ἁρμονία. ad Pomp. 124 27. ad Amm. ii. 136 12. Harmony, composition, adjustment of words. The μέση ἁρμονία in ad Pomp. 124 27 is the same as the κοινὴ ἁρμονία described on p. 18 supra. It is hardly possible to find a satisfactory equivalent in English for ἁρμονία λόγου, the sense being concinna orationis compositio.

ἀρρενικός. ad Amm. ii. 146 12. Of the masculine gender.

ἀρχαιοπρεπής. ad Pomp. 98 15. Old-fashioned: used of archaic words.

ἀρχαιότης. ad Pomp. 98 1. Antiquity. Cp. Plat. Legg. 657 B.

ἀσχημάτιστος. ad Pomp. 126 6. Lacking in figures (σχήματα) Cp. [Plut.] Vit. Andoc. 15, ἐστὶ δὲ ἀπλοῦς καὶ ἀκατάσκευος ἐν τοῖς λόγοις, ἀφελής τε καὶ ἀσχημάτιστος.

Ἀττικῶς. ad Amm. i. 68 6, 76 3. ad Pomp. 114 5. In ad Amm. i. the word is used of the researches of Philochorus into Attic history etc.; in ad Pomp. it means the Attic dialect (sc. γλῶττα).

αὐθέκαστος. ad Pomp. 112 22. Severe, uncompromising. Cp. the use of αὐθάδης, with reference to Thucydides' style, in de Comp. c. 22, ἀρχαῖκόν δέ τι καὶ αὐθαδὲς ἐπιδείκνυται κάλλος. The term αὐθέκαστος is used by Plutarch (Vit. Cat. c. 6) to describe the honest bluntness of Cato. It is used, de Comp. c. 22, of the αὐστηρὰ ἁρμονία, which is characterised as: ἥκιστα ἀνθηρά, μεγαλόφρων, αὐθέκαστος, ἀκόμψευτος.

αὐστηρός. ad Amm. ii. 136 13. Stern, austere. The following antithetic expressions in the de adm. vi dic. in Dem. fix the meaning: αὐστηρὰν ἰλαράν (c. 8); τοτὲ μὲν τὸ ἀρχαιοπρεπὲς καὶ αὐστηρόν, τοτὲ δὲ τὸ μελιχρὸν καὶ φιλόκαινον ἐμφαινόμενον (c. 48).

αὐχμός. ad Pomp. 106 13. Here used, as by Thucydides, in the literal sense of drought. Elsewhere (de adm. vi dic. in Dem. c. 44) applied to a spare, meagre, jejune style: cp. the adj. αὐχμηρός in de Thucyd. c. 51, αὐχμηρὰν καὶ ἀκόσμητον καὶ ἰδιωτικὴν (πραγματείαν).

ἀφελής. ad Pomp. 96 21. Plain, simple. Cp. de adm. vi dic. in Dem. c. 2, ἡ δὲ ἑτέρα λέξις ἡ λιτή καὶ ἀφελής (illustrated by the style of Lysias).

βούλεσθαι. ad Pomp. 96 17. To aspire. Ernesti, Lex. Techn. Graec. Rhet. p. 58: "Hoc verbo utitur Dionysius Halic. ut studium atque artem significet, qua quis orationem instruat, contrariam simplicitati naturali, quam quis naturae beneficio adhibet, ut in Iud. Isocr. cap. 3 πέφυκε ἡ Δυσίου λέξις ἔχειν τὸ χαρίεν, ἡ δὲ Ἰσοκράτους βούλεται, h. e. Lysiana dictio naturalem suavitatem habet, Isocratis autem affectatam, studio quaesitam." Cp. ad Pomp. 96 19.

γενικός. ad Amm. ii. 146 8, 146 14. Genitive: γενικὴ πτώσις.

γένος. ad Amm. ii. 146 6. Gender.

γλωττηματικός. ad Amm. ii. 132 17, 136 18. Obscure, recondite. Cp. Aristot. Poetics c. 21, ἅπαν δὲ ὀνομά ἐστιν ἡ κύριον ἢ γλῶττα.....λέγω δὲ κύριον μὲν ὃ χρῶνται ἕκαστοι, γλῶτταν ('strange word') δὲ ὃ ἕτεροι. Galen (Gloss. Hipp. xix. 63) ὅσα τοίνυν τῶν ὀνομάτων ἐν μὲν τοῖς πάλαι χρόνοις ἦν συνήθη, νῦν δὲ οὐκέτι ἐστί, τὰ μὲν τοιαῦτα γλώττας καλοῦσι. de adm. vi dic. in Dem. c. 4, οὔτε γὰρ ἀρχαίοις οὔτε πεποιημένοις οὔτε γλωττηματικοῖς ὀνόμασιν ἀλλὰ τοῖς κοινοτάτοις καὶ συνηθεστάτοις κέχρηται.

γραφικός. ad Amm. i. 58 2, χαριέστατος ἀπάντων τῶν λόγων καὶ γραφικώτατος: the most literary or polished, that which reads the best. "While the first epithet, χαριέστατος, implies all the grace and charm of perfect Attic diction; the second, γραφικώτατος, points to the finish and precision characteristic of the written style, as contrasted with the style of debate which lends itself more readily to delivery. Such at least is the definition given in Aristotle's Rhetoric, iii. 12 § 2, ἐστὶ δὲ λέξις γραφικὴ μὲν ἡ ἀκριβεστάτη, ἀγωνιστικὴ δὲ ἡ ὑποκριτικωτάτη. In § 6 of the same chapter, Aristotle describes the epideictic style as γραφικωτάτη, that is, 'in the highest degree adapted for writing, for its special function is reading': and next to this he places the forensic style (ἡ μὲν οὖν ἐπιδεικτικὴ λέξις γραφικωτάτη· τὸ γὰρ ἔργον αὐτῆς ἀνάγνωσις· δευτέρα δὲ ἡ δικανικὴ)." Sandys, Speech of Demosthenes against Leptines, p. xxxiv.

δεινότης. ad Amm. i. 56 14, ad Pomp. 126 4. The quality of δεινότης, attributed to Demosthenes above all orators, is that mastery which is the joint result of force and cleverness. No one translation will serve in all cases, but such equivalents as mastery, oratorical power, impressiveness, nervous force, intensity, skill, resourcefulness may be suggested. Cp. Demetr. de Eloc. 247, τὰ δὲ ἀντίθετα καὶ παρόμοια ἐν ταῖς περιόδοις φευκτέον· ὄγκον γὰρ ποιούσιν, οὐ δεινότητα, πολλαχού δὲ καὶ ψυχρότητα ἀντὶ δεινότητος, Dionys. H. de Thucyd. c. 53, τὴν ἐξεγείρουσαν τὰ πάθη δεινότητα, ibid. c. 23, οὐδὲ δὴ τόνον οὐδὲ βάρος οὐδὲ πάθος διεγείρον τὸν νοῦν οὐδὲ τὸ ἐρρωμένον καὶ ἐναγώνιον πνεῦμα, ἐξ ὧν ἡ καλουμένη γίνεται δεινότης. This last passage (together with such phrases as τὸ δεινὸν καὶ φοβερόν in ad Amm. ii. 136 14) is enough to show that the word is not confined to mere 'cleverness' or 'ingenuity,' though that is the predominant meaning in Dem. de Cor. 276, where δεινός may be translated 'rhetorician' and τὴν ἐμὴν δεινότητα 'my rhetorical skill.'

δημηγορία. ad Amm. i. 56 13 (ἀγῶνας.....δημηγορικούς), 58 4, 58 13 (λόγον.....δημηγορικόν), 58 15, 58 21, 58 24, 60 5 (δημηγορικός), 66 4 (δημηγορεῖν), 70 7, 70 13 (λόγους.....δημηγορικούς), 72 4, 72 8, 72 14, 72 22, 78 21 (ἐδημηγόρουν: from Dem. de Cor.), 80 16 (δημηγορικούς.....λόγους); ad Pomp. 114 27; ad Amm. ii. 140 1, 150 4. A speech before the assembly, a parliamentary speech. Specially used of the Speeches (ῥητορεῖαι) of Thucydides: de Thucyd. c. 34, ad Pomp. 114 27, ad Amm. ii. 140 2. A list of the δημηγορίαι (συμβουλευτικοὶ λόγοι) of Demosthenes will be found in S. H. Butcher's Demosthenes, p. 170.

δημόσιος. ad Amm. i. 56 21, 60 5, 70 8, 82 1. Of speeches: public. λόγοι δημόσιοι is used by Dionysius to cover both λόγοι δημηγορικοί and λόγοι δικανικοί: cp. 60 5. In λόγους δημοσίους εἰς δικαστήρια γεγραφώς (70 8) the reference is to 'orationes forenses in causis ad maiestatem plebis pertinentibus,' i.e. τῶν δικανικῶν λόγων τοὺς δημοσίους) (τοὺς ἰδιωτικούς: see list in S. H. Butcher's Demosthenes, p. 171.

διατίθεσθαι. ad Amm. i. 58 1, 72 5, 72 8, ad Pomp. 102 2. To deliver a speech. Equivalent to ἀπαγγέλλειν p. 185 supra. διελήλυθε is used in the same sense ad Amm. i. 72 13, 72 22.

δικανικός. ad Amm. i. 56 12. Forensic. Longer phrases are also used to denote forensic speeches, e.g. ad Amm. i. 56 23, 66 5, 0 8, 80 9.

ἁλληνίζειν. ad Pomp. 98 8. To speak or write Greek. Especially used of pure Greek writing: Aristot. Rhet. iii. 5, 1, ἔστι δ' ἀρχὴ τῆς λέξεως τὸ ἁλληνίζειν.

ἑμβριθής. ad Amm. ii. 136 14. Of style: weight, gravity (τὸ ἐμβριθές).

ἐνάργεια. ad Pomp. 92 6, 114 10. Vividness: vivid, pictorial, graphic representation. The following passages will illustrate the meaning: Dionys. Hal. de Lysia c. 7, ἔχει δὲ καὶ τὴν ἐνάργειαν πολλὴν ἢ Δυσίου λέξις· αὕτη δ' ἐστὶ δύναμις τις ὑπὸ τὰς αἰσθήσεις ἄγουσα τὰ λεγόμενα, γίνεται δ' ἐκ τῆς τῶν παρακολουθούντων λήψεως, π. ὑψ. c. 15, ὥς δ' ἑτερόν τι ἢ ῥητορικὴ φαντασία βούλεται καὶ ἕτερον ἢ παρὰ ποιηταῖς, οὐκ ἂν λάθοι σε, οὐδ' ὅτι τῆς μὲν ἐν ποιήσει τέλος ἐστὶν ἐκπληξίς, τῆς δ' ἐν λόγοις ἐνάργεια, ἀμφοτέραι δ' ὁμῶς τό τε <παθητικὸν> ἐπιζητοῦσι καὶ τὸ συγκεκνημένον, Spengel's Rhet. Gr. i. 439, (Anonymi Ars), ἔστι δὲ ἐνάργεια λόγος ὑπ' ὅψιν ἄγων τὸ δηλούμενον. See also Demetr. de Elocut. 209—222, and Jebb's Att. Or. i. 172, 173. The Latin equivalent is evidentia.

ἐνεργητικός. ad Amm. ii. 140 18. Active: of verbs.

ἐνθύμημα. ad Amm. i. 62 25, 64 6, 64 8, 64 21, 74 5, ad Pomp. 114 28, 120 1 (ἐνθυμηματικός), 120 2, ad Amm. ii. 134 21, 152 5, 154 12. Rhetorical syllogism: Aristotle's definition, as quoted in ad Amm. i. 64 8. "By enthymeme, Aristotle meant a rhetorical syllogism: that is, a syllogism drawn, not from the premisses (ἀρχαί) proper to any particular science—such, for instance, as medicine—but from propositions relating to contingent things in the sphere of human action, which are the common property of all discussion; propositions which he classifies as general (εἰκότα) and particular (σημεῖα); and accordingly defines an enthymeme as 'a syllogism from probabilities and signs.' [Arist. An. Pr. ii. 27, συλλογισμὸς ἐξ εἰκότων καὶ σημείων.] A misapprehension of Aristotle's meaning had, as early as the first century B.C., led to the conception of the enthymeme as not merely a syllogism of a particular subject-matter, but also as a syllogism of which one premiss is suppressed. [Quint. v. 10 § 3: this is what Juvenal means, Sat. vi. 449, by curtum enthymema.] The term epicheireme was then brought in to denote a rhetorical syllogism which is stated in full—an 'essay' to deal thoroughly with the issue at stake," Jebb Att. Or. ii. 289, 290. Thus the Aristotelian ἐνθύμημα is an argument based on probable evidence. But in the later rhetorical writers (to judge from the illustrations given by Dionysius, and by Demetrius de Elocutione) ἐνθυμήματα sometimes meant little more than considerations, points. Cp. Volkmann, Die Rhetorik der Griechen und Römer, p. 192: "Dieser doppelten Namensdeutung gemäss verstand man nun unter Enthymem theils das Beweismittel selbst, d. h. den Gedanken, der angewandt wird, um etwas anderes zu beweisen, daher ἐνθύμημα oft gerade synonym mit ἐννόημα, vgl. Schol. Aristid. p. 173. Soph. Oed. Col. 292, auch bei Isokrates ist ἐνθύμημα wohl nichts anderes, als der zum Beweis benutzte Gedanke — theils die Darstellung des Beweises, und letzteres war das gewöhnliche." ibid. p. 455: "Eine sententia ex contrariis wurde, gleichsam κατ' ἐξοχὴν, ἐνθύμημα genannt, wie der Satz aus Cic. pro Lig. 4, 10: 'quorum igitur impunitas, Caesar, tuae clementiae laus est, eorum te ipsorum ad crudelitatem acuet oratio?'" ἐνικός. ad Amm. ii. 134 7. Singular: of number.

ἐξηλλαγμένος. ad Pomp. 98 26, ad Amm. ii. 134 19. Uncommon, artificial, elaborate. The full phrase would be ἐξηλλαγμένος τῶν ἐν ἔθει (de adm. vi dic. in Dem. c. 56), or the like. Cp. ἡ ἐξαλλαγή τῆς συνήθους χρήσεως ad Amm. ii. 136 25, ταῦτα ἐξήλλακται μὲν ἐκ τῆς πολιτικῆς καὶ συνήθους τοῖς πολλοῖς ἀπαγγελίας de Thucyd. c. 54, ἡ τῆς συνθέσεως ἐξαλλαγή de Dinarcho c. 7, ἐξηλλαγμένην) (συνήθη (διάλεκτον) de adm. vi dic. in Dem. c. 8. The use in Aristot. Poetics c. 21 is more special: ἐξηλλαγμένον δ' ἐστὶν ὅταν τοῦ ὀνομαζομένου τὸ μὲν καταλείπη τὸ δὲ ποιῇ, οἷον τὸ "δεξιτερόν κατὰ μαζόν" ἀντὶ τοῦ δεξιόν.

ἰδιωμα. ad Amm. ii. 130 6, 130 17. Peculiarity of language.

ἰλαρός. ad Pomp. 116 4. Bright, joyous: opp. φοβερός. Cp. ἰσστηρός, p. 186 supra.

ἰσχνός. ad Pomp. 96 19, 96 21, 100 8, 100 19, 100 25. Of style: vain. Cp. Quintil. Inst. Or. xii. 10, 58: "namque unum subtile genus), quod ἰσχνόν vocant, alterum grande atque robustum, quod δρόν dicunt, constituunt; tertium alii medium ex duobus alii florilum (namque id ἀνθηρόν appellant) addiderunt." In the passages of he ad Pomp. ἰσχνός is used in connexion with ἀφελής, ἀκριβής, ποιήτος, as elsewhere with λιτός. It is sometimes contrasted with ψηλός. Cp. also de adm. vi dic. in Dem. cc. 2, 34, and the use of tenuis in Cic. Orat. v. 20 and Quintil. Inst. Orat. xii. 10, 21. The vain style was regarded as bearing preeminently the stamp of Lysias: p. Λυσιακός (χαρακτήρ), de adm. vi dic. in Dem. c. 11.

ἰσχύς. ad Pomp. 114 18. Of style: strength.

καθαρός. ad Pomp. 118 2. Clear, lucid.

καινότης. ad Amm. ii. 136 24. Novelty.

κακοῦργος. ad Amm. i. 66 15. Dishonest, mischievous.

καλλιπεῖν. ad Pomp. 98 6. To use elegant language. Cp. ὁ καλλιπεῖς Ἀγάθων, Aristoph. Vesp. 49. In earlier Greek the verb was used in the middle voice: Thucyd. vi. 83 καὶ οὐ καλλιεπούμεθα ὡς ἡ ὄν βάρβαρον μόνοι καθελόντες εἰκότως ἄρχομεν, Aristot. Rhet. iii. 2, 3 ἰ δοῦλος καλλιεποῖτο ἢ λίαν νέος, ἀπρεπέστερον.

καλλιλογία. ad Pomp. 120 1. Elegant language.—Though the compounds have a somewhat depreciatory sense, τὸ καλόν ('beauty,' or perhaps better 'nobility') is a term of high praise. In de Comp. c. 11 (cp. p. 13 supra) a good style is regarded as resulting from the combination of τὸ καλόν and ἡ ἡδονή. The former includes: grandeur (μεγαλοπρέπεια), gravity (βάρος), majesty (σεμνολογία), dignity (ἀξίωμα).

κανόν. ad Pomp. 114 5. Standard. Lat. norma et regula.

κατάλληλος. ad Amm. ii. 146 22. Of grammatical construction: congruous, regular. Cp. ἀκατάλληλος supra, and also de adm. vi dic. in Dem. c. 27, de Thucyd. cc. 31, 37. In Modern Greek, κατάλληλος means 'suitable.'

κατασκευάζω. ad Amm. i. 56 24, 66 13, 80 25, 84 23, ad Pomp. 100 9, ad Amm. ii. 130 11. To construct, compose. κατασκευασμένη (ad Pomp. 100 9) = Lat. ornatam: cp. de Lysia c. 8 ἔστι δὲ παντὸς μᾶλλον ἔργου τεχνικῶς κατασκευασμένος, and de Comp. c. 26 ἐν ᾧ ποῦν τὸ κατασκευασμένον ἐστὶ καὶ ἔντεχνον. With ad Amm. i. 84 23, cp. de Comp. c. 23 ἐνὸς ἔτι παραθήσω λέξιν ἀνδρὸς εἰς τὸν αὐτὸν κατασκευασμένην χαρακτήρα.

κατασκευή. ad Pomp. 96 27, 100 6, 100 10, 100 21, 102 9, 102 17, 114 17, ad Amm. ii. 154 13. Elaboration, embellishment. Cp. de Isocr. c. 20 οὐ μέντοι παντάπασί γε τὴν Ἰσοκράτειον ἀγωγὴν ἐκβέβηκεν, ἀκαρῇ δέ τινα διασφύζει τῆς κατασκευῆς τε καὶ σεμνολογίας ἐκείνης ἐνθυμήματα καὶ ποιητικώτερα μᾶλλον ἐστὶν ἢ ἀληθινώτερα. de adm. vi dic. in Dem. c. 23 τῆς δ' ἀπειροκαλίας αὐτὸν οὐδεπώποτ' ἐξήλωσα τῆς ἐν ταῖς ἐπιθέτοις κατασκευαῖς. V. ἐγκατάσκευος, p. 189 supra. There is a standing antithesis between τροπικὴ κατασκευή and κυρία φράσις (p. 9, n. 1 supra), but κατασκευή is not entirely confined to diction (cp. Jebb, Att. Or. i. 96 n., 100 n.). The usual meaning is well brought out in a passage of the de Isaeo c. 7 καὶ τὸ ἐπιλεγόμενον τούτῳ ἔτι μᾶλλον ἀκατάσκευον φαίνεται εἶναι καί, ὡς ἂν ἰδιώτης τις εἰπεῖν δύναιτο, [τὸ] εἰρημένον.....παρὰ δὲ Ἰσαίῳ κατασκευάσται τὸ δοκοῦν εἶναι ἀφελὲς καὶ οὐ λέληθεν ὅτι ἐστὶ ῥητορικόν. Cp. Diog. Laert. vii. 59 κατασκευή δὲ ἐστὶ λέξις ἐκπεφυγυῖα τὸν ἰδιωτισμόν.—From this rhetorical use of κατασκευή is to be distinguished the logical (e.g. de Lysia c. 24, π. ὕψ. c. 11).

κατορθοῦν. ad Pomp. 90 28, 94 5, 104 2, 104 3, 114 11. Of correct and successful writing. Cp. π. ὕψ. p. 202 (s.v. κατόρθωμα).

κοινός. ad Amm. i. 56 16, 74 19. ad Amm. ii. 158 4. Current, ordinary.

κοινότης. ad Pomp. 98 26. Familiar usage. Cp. Isocr. Antid. 16 τὴν τῆς φωνῆς κοινότητα. So κοινός ad Pomp. 124 25: cp. de Isocr. c. 11 τοῖς κυρίοις καὶ συνήθεσι καὶ κοινοῖς ὀνόμασιν ἀμφοτέροι κέχρηται, de Dinarcho c. 2 ὀνόματα κοινὰ καὶ περιτρέχοντα (περιτρέχοντα = 'current').

κομψός. ad Pomp. 98 5, ad Amm. ii. 156 12. Elegant, superfine, precious. Cp. de Isocr. c. 12 συμβούλῃ δὲ δὴ περὶ πολέμου καὶ εἰρήνης λέγοντι καὶ ἰδιώτῃ τὸν περὶ ψυχῆς τρέχοντι κίνδυνον ἐν δικασταῖς τὰ κομψὰ καὶ θεατρικὰ καὶ μειρακιώδη ταῦτα οὐκ οἶδα ἥτινα δύναται ἂν παρασχεῖν ὠφέλειαν, μᾶλλον δὲ οἶδα ὅτι καὶ βλάβης ἂν αἷτια γένοιτο. Norden, op. cit. i. p. 69 n. 1: "κομψόν zierlich, dann überhaupt geistreich (besser entsprechen französisch précieux, englisch euphuism, die italienischen concetti) stammt aus der alten Sophistenzeit."

κυκλικός. ad Pomp. 126 8. Recurring, regular.

κύριος. ad Pomp. 98 13, 114 25. Authoritative, accredited, current. Cp. de Lysia c. 3 (ἀρετὴ) ἢ διὰ τῶν κυρίων τε καὶ κοινῶν καὶ ἐν μέσῃ κειμένων ὀνομάτων ἐκφέρουσα τὰ νοούμενα, de Thucyd. c. 22 εἰς τε τὴν κυρίαν φράσιν καὶ εἰς τὴν τροπικὴν, Aristot. Poetics c. 21 ἅπαν δὲ ὀνομάσθην ἢ κύριον ἢ γλῶττα ἢ μεταφορὰ ἢ κόσμος ἢ πεποιημένον ἢ ἐπεκτεταμένον ἢ ὑφηρημένον ἢ ἐξηλλαγμένον. λέγω δὲ κύριον μὲν ὃ χρώνται ἕκαστοι, γλῶτταν δὲ ὃ ἕτεροι, ὥστε φανερόν ὅτι καὶ γλῶτταν καὶ κύριον εἶναι δυνατὸν τὸ αὐτό, μὴ τοῖς αὐτοῖς δέ· τὸ γὰρ σίγνυνον Κυπρίους μὲν κύριον, ἡμῖν δὲ γλῶττα. The Latin equivalent for ὀνόματα κύρια will be 'verba propria': also 'dominantia' (Wilkins, Epistles of Horace, p. 380). Cp. π. ὕψ. p. 202 (s.v. κυριολογία).

λεκτικός. ad Pomp. 92 27, 112 28, 116 11. Usually joined with some such noun as χαρακτήρ: belonging to the department of style (as opposed to that of subject-matter, πραγματικός). Cp. de Thucyd. c. 34 διελόμενός καὶ ταύτην διχῇ τὴν θεωρίαν εἰς τε τὸ πραγματικὸν μέρος καὶ εἰς τὸ λεκτικόν.

λέξις. ad Pomp. 98 26, etc. Style. Strictly λέξις refers to diction, but (like φράσις and ἑρμηνεία) it is often used in the general sense of literary expression. It was one of the five parts into which the art of rhetoric was sometimes divided: εὑρεσις (inventio), τάξις (dispositio), λέξις (elocutio), μνήμη (memoria), ὑπόκρισις (pronuntiatio).

λεπτός. ad Pomp. 96 24. Subtle, precise. Cp. Lat. subtilis, with its three metaphorical senses of: (1) delicate, (2) precise, (3) plain.

λήμμα. ad Amm. i. 54 12, δι' ἀναγκαίων συνάγεται λημμάτων, 'is a conclusion reached by indisputable data, presuppositions, premisses.' The expression is Aristotelian. Cp. π. ὕψ. p. 202.

λιγυρός. ad Pomp. 98 4. Clear utterance (τὸ λιγυρόν).

λόγοι. ad Pomp. 90 23, 90 25, 92 1, 92 9, 92 21, 94 1, 94 3, 94 6, etc. Speeches, discourses, style, oratory, literature. Cp. π. ὕψ. p. 203. For λόγοι in reference to Plato's dialogues, cp. Aristot. Polit. ii. 6 τὸ μὲν οὖν περιττὸν ἔχουσι πάντες οἱ τοῦ Σωκράτους λόγοι καὶ τὸ κομψὸν καὶ τὸ καινοτόμον καὶ τὸ ζητητικόν.

μεγαλοπρεπής. ad Pomp. 102 28, 116 13, 124 25. Stately, grand. Joined with ὑψηλός and παρακεκινδυνευμένος in the first of these passages. Opposed to λιτός in de adm. vi dic. in Dem. c. 8.

μεираκιώδης. ad Pomp. 98 21, ad Amm. ii. 156 9. With youthful airs and graces, foppish, affected. τὸ μεираκιώδες is fully characterised in π. ὕψ. c. 3 § 4 τὸ δὲ μεираκιώδες ἀντικρὺς ὑπεναντίον τοῖς μεγέθεσι· ταπεινὸν γὰρ ἐξ ὅλου καὶ μικρόψυχον καὶ τῷ ὄντι κακὸν ἀγεννέστατον. τί ποτ' οὖν τὸ μεираκιώδες ἐστίν; ἢ δῆλον ὡς σχολαστικὴ νόησις, ὑπὸ περιεργασίας λήγουσα εἰς ψυχρότητα; ὀλισθαίνουνσι δ' εἰς τοῦτο τὸ γένος ὀρεγόμενοι μὲν τοῦ περιττοῦ καὶ πεποιημένου καὶ μάλιστα τοῦ ἡδέος, ἐποκέλλοντες δὲ εἰς τὸ ῥωπικὸν καὶ κακόζηλον. See the excellent note on the word in Norden, Antike Kunstprosa i. pp. 69, 70. Cp. Wilkins, Epistles of Horace, p. 383: "iuvnentur, a word coined doubtless by Horace, on the analogy of augurari, auspicari, interpretari, velitari, etc. (Roby § 961), to represent νεανιεύεσθαι or μεираκιεύεσθαι." So adulescentiaris = νεανιεύη, Norden i. 70.

μελαίνειν. ad Pomp. 98 9. To blacken, obfuscate, obscure.

μέλλων. ad Amm. ii. 148 10. Future tense: χρόνος.

μέρος. ad Pomp. 104 2. Branch, department. Cp. π. ὕψ. p. 203.

μεταβολή. ad Pomp. 110 20. Variety of style. Cp. π. ὕψ. p. 203.

μεταφορά. ad Amm. ii. 134 18. Transferred use, strained use. Here used in much the same sense as διαφορά, which is found in the parallel passage of the de adm. vi dic. in Dem. Also: metaphor (or simile), ad Amm. i. 66 19.

μετοχή. ad Amm. ii. 144 22. Participle. So μετοχικὸν ὄνομα ibid. 148 12, and μετοχικῶν (sc. ὀνομάτων s. μορίων) ibid. 134 11.

μετωνυμία. ad Pomp. 98 16. Metonymy. Cp. Cic. Orat. 93, "hanc ὑπαλλαγὴν rhetores, quia quasi summutantur verba pro verbis, μετωνυμίαν grammatici vocant, quod nomina transferuntur"; Quintil. Inst. Or. viii. 6, 23, "nec procul ab hoc genere (sc. synecdoche) discedit μετωνυμία, quae est nominis pro nomine positio. cuius vis est pro eo quod dicitur, causam propter quam dicitur ponere; sed, ut ait Cicero, ὑπαλλαγὴν rhetores dicunt." Sandys' edition of Cic. Orat. p. 103, "although metonymy may be regarded as coming under the head of metaphor in its widest sense (de Orat. iii. 169 ad fin.), there is a distinction. In metaphor another and a figurative expression takes the place of the literal one; in metonymy another literal expression (especially a name) is substituted for the proper literal one."

μῆγμα. ad Pomp. 96 18. A blend, a combination: of two different styles artificially united.

μόριον. ad Amm. ii. 134 14, 138 17. Part of speech. τὰ ῥηματικά μόρια τῆς λέξεως (in 138 17) = partes orationis verbales. Cp. de Comp. c. 7, αὐτὰ τὰ πρῶτα μόρια καὶ στοιχεῖα τῆς λέξεως, ibid. c. 17 πᾶν ὄνομα καὶ ῥῆμα καὶ ἄλλο μόριον λέξεως.

νόημα. ad Amm. ii. 134 21, 136 7, 152 5. Thought, thought as expressed in a sentence. In 134 15 Reiske retains the MS. reading νοημάτων, and translates ἐν δὲ τοῖς συνδυαστικοῖς καὶ τοῖς προθετικοῖς μορίοις καὶ ἔτι μᾶλλον ἐν τοῖς διαρθροῦσι τὰς τῶν νοημάτων δυνάμεις ποιητοῦ τρόπον ἐνεξουσιάζων by "in coniunctionibus et praepositionibus, iis praesertim quae sententiarum robur et vim distinguunt, poetica prorsus utitur licentia."

νοῦς. ad Pomp. 98 10, 112 25. Mind; meaning.

ξένος. ad Pomp. 98 14, ad Amm. ii. 132 18. Strange, foreign. The attraction which τὸ ξενικόν had for the Athenians may be illustrated from Aristot. Rhet. iii. 2, 3 διὸ δεῖ ποιεῖν ξένην τὴν διάλεκτον. θαυμασταὶ γὰρ τῶν ἀπόντων εἰσίν· ἡδὺ δὲ τὸ θαυμαστόν, iii. 2, 8 τὸ σαφές καὶ τὸ ἡδὺ καὶ τὸ ξενικὸν ἔχει μάλιστα ἡ μεταφορά, iii. 7, 11 τὰ ξένα μάλιστα ἀρμόττει λέγοντι παθητικῶς, and also from Diod. Sic. Bibl. Hist. xii. 53 (of Gorgias) τῷ ξενίζοντι τῆς λέξεως ἐξέπληξε τοὺς Ἀθηναίους ὄντας εὐφυεῖς καὶ φιλολόγους. πρῶτος γὰρ ἐχρήσατο τῆς λέξεως σχηματισμοῖς περιττοτέροις, καὶ τῇ φιλοτεχνίᾳ διαφέρουσιν ἀντιθέτοις καὶ ἰσοκώλοις καὶ παρίσοις καὶ ὁμοιοτελεύτοις, καὶ τισιν ἑτέροις τοιοῦτοις, ἃ τότε μὲν διὰ τὸ ξένον τῆς κατασκευῆς ἀποδοχῆς ἡξιούτο, νῦν δὲ περιεργίαν ἔχειν δοκεῖ, καὶ φαίνεται καταγέλαστον, πλεονάκης καὶ κατακόρως τιθέμενον.

[The above passages are quoted in Jebb's Attic Orators i. pp. cxxv, cxxvi. The last, because of its general importance for the purpose of this Glossary, is given here at greater length.]

ὄγκος. ad Pomp. 102 9. Pomp. ὄγκος (like ξένος supra) is a term which may be used in a complimentary (cp. π. ὑπ. p. 204) or a depreciatory sense, according to the standpoint of the critic. Volkmann (Rhet. d. Gr. u. Röm. p. 557) errs in giving ὄγκος as an exact synonym of μέγεθος, and in adding "das Wort ὄγκος bezeichnet bei den Rhetoren keineswegs, wie unser Schwulst, etwas schlechtes, sondern das os magnum, die sublimitas, s. Göller zu Demetr. S. 113. Chrysost. de sacerd. iv. p. 305, 50: εἰ μὲν τὴν λειότητα Ἰσοκράτους ἀπῆλθον καὶ τὸν Δημοσθένους ὄγκον καὶ τὴν Θουκυδίδου σεμνότητα καὶ τὸ Πλάτωνος ὕψος. Vom ὄγκος des Aeschylus sprach ja schon Sophokles nach Plut. de prof. in virt. 7 p. 79 B."

οἰκονομία. ad Pomp. 116 22, 122 5. Arrangement of material. Cp. Quintil. Inst. Or. iii. 3, 9: "oeconomiae, quae Graece appellata ex cura rerum domesticarum et hic per abusionem posita nomine Latino caret."

ὁμοειδής. ad Pomp. 114 26, 118 24, 120 6, 126 9 (ὁμοειδεῖα). Uniform, wanting in variety.

ὄνομα. ad Pomp. 96 26, 98 11, 98 12, 98 13, ad Amm. ii. 134 1, 134 2 (ὀνοματικῶς), 134 3, 134 11 (ὀνοματικόν: cp. s.v. μετοχή supra), 136 6, 138 3, 138 4, 144 21, 148 12. Word; noun. Wilkins Hor. Ep. p. 381: "nomina.....verba: ὀνόματα.....ῥήματα, 'nouns and verbs,' covered with Plato the whole of language (cp. Cratyl. 431 B, λόγοι γάρ που, ὡς ἐγῶμαι, ἢ τούτων [ῥημάτων καὶ ὀνομάτων] ξύνθεσις ἐστίν: cp. 425 A): and though Aristotle added the σύνδεσμος and the Stoics completed the 'parts of speech,' the names of the two chief classes were often used in the same wide sense, as here."

ὄργανον. ad Amm. ii. 136 10. Instrument, organ. Ernesti, op. cit. p. 233: "ὄργανα et χρώματα distinguit, quorum illa formam externam, haec vim et significationem verbis addunt."

οὐδέτερος. ad Amm. ii. 134 9, 144 7, 144 17. Of the neuter gender. The triple division of the genders (γένη) into ἀρρενικόβ, θηλυκόν, οὐδέτερον is no doubt of Stoic origin.

παθητικός. ad Amm. ii. 134 6, 140 15, 142 1. Passive (παθητικὸν ῥήμα). See also under πάθος.

πάθος. ad Pomp. 114 13, 124 10. Passions, emotions. So τὸ παθητικόν (ad Amm. ii. 136 15) = the power of stirring the emotions.

Cp. Cic. Orat. c. 37, "duo sunt enim, quae bene tractata ab oratore admirabilem eloquentiam faciant; quorum alterum est, quod Graeci ἠθικὸν vocant, ad naturas et ad mores et ad omnem vitae consuetudinem adcommodat; alterum, quod eidem παθητικὸν nominant, quo perturbantur animi et concitantur, in quo uno regnat oratio." Sandys' note ad loc. should be consulted. Volkmann Rhet. 273: "Das Griechische πάθος—August. de Civ. Dei viii. 147, bemerkt mit Recht: verbum de verbo πάθος passio diceretur, motus animi contra rationem—wurde allgemein Lateinisch durch affectus wiedergegeben."

παιδιώδης. ad Pomp. 126 14. Puerile. From παιδίον: cp. παιδαριώδης. [In Aristot. Eth. Nic. vii. 8, 1150 B it is from παιδιά: δοκεῖ δὲ καὶ ὁ παιδιώδης ἀκόλαστος εἶναι, ἔστι δὲ μαλακός· ἡ γὰρ παιδιά ἀνεσίς ἐστιν, εἴπερ ἀνάπανσις.]

παράδειγμα. ad Amm. i. 62 24. An 'example.' Cp. Aristot. Rhet. i. 2, 8 (on p. 64 supra).

παρακεκινδυνευμένος. ad Pomp. 104 1. Venturesome, audacious. Cp. Aristoph. Ran. 98, ὅστις φθέγγεται | τοιοντονί τι παρακεκινδυνευμένον.

παρεμβολή. ad Pomp. 126 13, ad Amm. ii. 152 24. Insertion, digression, episode. The same meaning as παρέκβασις and παρενθήκη. Reiske (vi. p. 1138) thinks that the MS. reading παραβολάς can be retained, but he does not give any other example of the sense he would here assign to the word: "παραβολὰς videtur appellare τὰ παρεμβεβλημένα, quae alii ἐπεισόδια appellant, adscititias, aliunde petitas, praeeter rem ingestas, a re alienas narrationes." παρέμπτωσις. ad Amm. ii. 134 22. Insertion. αἱ μεταξὺ παρεμπτώσεις = parentheses, 152 6 ibid.

παρίσσωσις. ad Amm. ii. 136 1, 156 10. Parallelism in structure. Sandys, Cic. Orat. p. 45: "The simplest classification of these figures is that represented in the following table:—

- (i) ἀντίθεσις = parallelism in sense.
- (ii) παρίσσωσις = parallelism in structure.
- (iii) παρομοίωσις = parallelism in sound.

(iii) is subdivided into three species:—

- (1) ὁμοιακάτακτον.
- (2) ὁμοιοτέλευτον.
- (3) παρονομασία."

Cp. de Lysia c. 14 τῶν περὶ τὰς ἀντιθέσεις καὶ παρισώσεις καὶ παρομοιώσεις καὶ τὰ παραπλήσια τούτοις σχήματα διεσπονδακόντων, which is translated as follows in Desrousseaux-Egger's edition of the de Lysia: "ceux qui travaillent les antithèses, les symétries, les ressemblances de mots et autres figures semblables." Aristotle Rhet. iii. 9, 9 ἀντίθεσις μὲν οὖν τὸ τοιοῦτόν ἐστιν, παρίσωσις δ' ἐὰν ἴσα τὰ κῶλα, παρομοίωσις δ' ἐὰν ὅμοια τὰ ἐσχάτα ἔχῃ ἐκάτερον τὸ κῶλον. See also Rhet. ad Alex. 26—28. In both the passages of the ad Amm. ii. there is a special reference to the employment of these figures by Gorgias and his school.

παρομοίωσις. ad Amm. ii. 136 1, 156 10. Parallelism in sound. See under παρίσωσις.

παρονομασία. ad Amm. ii. 136 2. Assonance, play on words. See under παρίσωσις. Cp. Cic. Orat. 135 "cum...verba...leviter commutata ponuntur"; id. de Orat. iii. 54, 206 "paullum immutatum verbum atque deflexum"; Aristot. Rhet. iii. 11, 6 τὰ παρὰ γράμμα σκώμματα. Annominatio is the Latin equivalent: cp. <Cornificius> ad Herennium iv. 29 "annominatio est, cum ad idem verbum et ad idem nomen acceditur commutatione unius litterae aut litterarum; aut ad res dissimiles similia verba accommodantur."

παρών. ad Amm. ii. 148 9. Present tense: χρόνος.

παχύς. ad Pomp. 98 9. Coarse, heavy. Cp. de Isaeo c. 19 Ἀλκιδάμαντα δὲ τὸν ἀκουστήν αὐτοῦ παχύτερον ὄντα τὴν λέξιν. Cp. π. ὕψ. c. 29 εἰθὺς γὰρ ἀβλεμὲς προσπίπτει, κουφολογίας τε ὄζον καὶ παχύτατον. Cic. Orat. viii. 25 "asciverunt aptum suis auribus opimum quoddam et tamquam adipatae dictionis genus," where Sandys remarks "Similarly elsewhere varieties of style are discriminated with the help of metaphors borrowed from the human body, its blood, bones, sinews, muscles, etc., see in Quint. x. 1 §§ 36 and 60 (with Mayor's notes), and esp. the elaborate comparison in Tac. dial. de orat. 21 'oratio autem, sicut corpus hominis, ea demum pulchra est in qua non eminent venae nec ossa numerantur, sed temperatus ac bonus sanguis implet membra et exsurgit toris ipsosque nervos rubor tegit et decor commendat'."

πεζός. ad Amm. ii. 132 13. Prosaic. Cp. Quint. x. 1 § 81.

πεποιημένος. ad Pomp. 98 14. Artificial, specially coined. Cp. Aristot. Poet. xxi. 9 πεποιημένον δ' ἐστὶν ὃ ὅλως μὴ καλούμενον ὑπὸ τινῶν αὐτὸς τίθεται ὁ ποιητής, δοκεῖ γὰρ ἑνια εἶναι τοιαῦτα, οἷον τὰ κέρατα ἐρνύγας καὶ τὸν ἱερέα ἀρητήρα.

περίεργος. ad Pomp. 118 27. Over-wrought, curious. Cp. de Lysia c. 6 ταύτην ὀλίγοι μὲν ἐμιμήσαντο, Δημοσθένης δὲ καὶ ὑπερεβάλετο πλὴν οὐχ οὕτως ἐπιεικῶς οὐδὲ ἀφελῶς ὥσπερ Λυσίας χρησάμενος αὐτῇ, ἀλλὰ περιέργως καὶ πικρῶς. Aeschines taunted Demosthenes with περιεργία and τὸ πικρόν: de adm. vi dic. in Dem. c. 55 ἃ δέ γε Αἰσχίνης περὶ αὐτοῦ γράφει συκοφαντῶν, ὥσπερ ἔφην, τοτὲ μὲν ὡς πικροῖς καὶ περιέργοις ὀνόμασι χρωμένον, τοτὲ δ' ὡς ἀηδέσι καὶ φορτικοῖς, ῥαδίᾳς ἔχει τὰς ἀπολογίας. See also ibid. c. 35. In de Lysia c. 15 ἀφελής and ἀπερίεργος are found conjoined. Περιέργος is good Modern Greek (both literary and colloquial) in the sense of 'curious' or 'strange.'

περίοδος. ad Pomp. 120 7, 126 9, ad Amm. ii. 152 19. Period. Cp. Aristot. Rhet. iii. 9, 3 λέγω δὲ περίοδον λέξιν ἔχουσαν ἀρχὴν καὶ τελευτὴν αὐτὴν καθ' αὐτὴν καὶ μέγεθος εὐσύνοπτον. With the last part of Aristotle's definition may be compared Dionysius' view (de Comp. c. 23) that, in the γλαφυρὰ καὶ ἀνθηρὰ σύνθεσις, the περιόδου χρόνος should be οὐ πνεῦμα τέλειον ἀνδρὸς κρατήσῃ.

περιοχή. ad Pomp. 110 27. Section. Cp. the use of περικοπή.

περιττός. ad Pomp. 100 7. Unusual, far-fetched, 'exquisite.' The word is opposed to ἀπέρिटτος (de adm. vi dic. in Dem. c. 8), and to κοινὸς καὶ δημῳδὸς (π. ὕψ. c. 40, 2). Its meaning is sufficiently defined by such a sentence as: δεχέσθω δέ τις τὴν περιεργίαν τῶν ὀνομάτων ὑπ' αὐτοῦ <λεγομένην> λέγεσθαι νυνὶ περιττὴν ἐργασίαν καὶ ἐξηλλαγμένην τῶν ἐν ἔθει (de adm. vi c. 56). The noun περιττολογία is found in ad Pomp. 98 5.

περίφρασις. ad Pomp. 98 12. Periphrasis, circumlocution.

πικρός. ad Pomp. 114 9. Repellent, odious: the opposite of ἡδύς. Cp. πικρά (112 23 ibid.) = harsh.—τὸ πικρόν (ad Amm. ii. 136 13), and ἡ πικρότης (ad Pomp. 124 28), = incisiveness, pungency.

πίνος. ad Pomp. 98 1. Mellowing deposit, tinge of antiquity. Cp. de adm. vi dic. in Dem. c. 39 διαφαίνεται δέ τις ὁμοία καὶ τούτοις εὐγένεια καὶ σεμνότης ἁρμονίας τὸν ἀρχαῖον φυλάττουσα πίνειν, ibid. c. 44 αὐχμοῦ μεστὸν εἶναι καὶ πίνου, ibid. c. 45 τῆς μὲν ἡδείας συνθέσεως ἐλάττω μοῖραν ἔχουσας, τῆς δὲ αὐστηρᾶς καὶ πεπινωμένης πλείω, de Comp. c. 22 ἥκιστα ἀνθηρὰ, μεγαλόφρων, αὐθέκαστος, ἀκόμψεντος, τὸν ἀρχαῖσμον καὶ τὸν πίνον ἔχουσα κάλλος, ibid. c. 22 εὐπινῇ καὶ αὐστηρὰν πεποίηκε τὴν ἁρμονίαν, ibid. c. 23 σχήμασί τε οὐ τοῖς ἀρχαιοπρεπεστάτοις, οὐδ' ὅσοις ἡ σεμνότης τις ἢ βάρος ἢ πίνος πρόσσεστιν, ἀλλὰ τοῖς τρυφεροῖς καὶ μαλακοῖς ὡς τὰ πολλὰ χρῆσθαι φιλεῖ, Cic. ad Att. xiv. 7 (Tyrrell and Purser v. 232) "a Cicerone mihi litterae sane πεπινωμένοι et bene longae. ceterum autem vel fingi possunt: πίνος litterarum significat doctiorem," ibid. xv. 16 a "tandem a Cicerone tabellarius, et mehercule litterae πεπινωμένως ('in the true classic style,' Tyrrell and Purser v. 299) scriptae, quod ipsum προκοπήν aliquam significat, itemque ceteri praeclara scribunt." Plut. Vit. Alex. c. 4: 'Ἀπελλήρ δὲ γράφων τὸν κεραυνοφόρον οὐκ ἐμμήσατο τὴν χροάν, ἀλλὰ φαιότερον καὶ πεπινωμένον ἐποίησεν. The foregoing passages (particularly that of Plutarch) point to the metaphor being that of the oxidation of bronze statues, weather-marked and mellowed, bearing upon them the patina so highly prized by the connoisseur. A scholium on ad Pomp. 98 1 (and on the corresponding passage of the de adm. vi dic. in Dem.) seems to suggest a different explanation: πίνος ὁ ῥύπος ἦτοι ὁ ἐπικείμενος χροὺς ὡς ἐπὶ μῆλων καὶ ἀπίων καὶ δαμασκηῶν. —See also π. ὕψ. p. 199 (εὐπίνεια), and (for the quantity of πίνος) Soph. Oed. C. 1259 γέρων γέροντι συγκατάκηκεν πίνος.

πίστις. ad Amm. i. 54 11, ad Amm. ii. 130 16. Proof. In de Lysia c. 19 (τῶν καλουμένων ἐντέχνων πίστεων), we have a reference to the Aristotelian division of πίστεις into ἄτεχνοι and ἐντεχνοί: τῶν δὲ πίστεων αἱ μὲν ἄτεχνοί εἰσιν αἱ δ' ἐντεχνοί. ἄτεχνα δὲ λέγω ὅσα μὴ δι' ἡμῶν πεπόρισται ἀλλὰ προὔπηρχεν, οἷον μάρτυρες βάσανοι συγγραφαὶ καὶ ὅσα τοιαῦτα, ἐντεχνα δὲ ὅσα διὰ τῆς μεθόδου καὶ δι' ἡμῶν κατασκευασθῆναι δυνατόν. ὥστε δεῖ τούτων τοῖς μὲν χρήσασθαι τὰ δὲ εὐρεῖν (Aristot. Rhet. i. 2, 2).

πλάσμα. ad Pomp. 118 7. Mould, form, manner. Cp. de Comp. c. 4 (passage quoted on p. 11 n. 3 supra), and π. ὕψ. c. 15, 8.

ποιητικός. ad Amm. ii. 140 16, 142 3. Active: δραστήριος, ἐνεργητικός. In ad Amm. ii. 136 10, 136 21 ποιητικός probably means artificial or elaborate, rather than simply poetical: so Ernesti p. 275. But cp. ad Amm. ii. 134 16.

ποικίλλω. ad Pomp. 116 25. To embroider, diversify.

πολιτικός. ad Amm. i. 54 17, ad Pomp. 92 8, 92 21, 126 19. Public, civil: used with λόγος, or λόγοι, in the sense of civil oratory, —the practical eloquence which is applied to public affairs, as distinguished from that of the school. πολιτικός λόγος, or the oratory of public life, covers therefore a more extensive field than political oratory (λόγος δημηγορικός). Indeed, in the so-called Rhetorica ad Alexandrum the word ῥητορική is not found, its place being taken by λόγοι πολιτικοί: e.g. δύο γένη τῶν πολιτικῶν εἰσι λόγων, τὸ μὲν δημηγορικόν, τὸ δὲ δικανικόν (Rhet. ad Alex., init.). By Philodemus, the representative of the Epicurean rhetoric, the ἐπιδεικτικὸν γένος is classed as σοφιστικὸς λόγος. It was the great ambition of Dionysius to revive the conception of oratory as πολιτικός λόγος, in which term he would include not only the γένος δημηγορικόν and the γένος δικανικόν, but also any examples of the γένος ἐπιδεικτικόν which had a public bearing: the γένος ἐπιδεικτικόν as a whole (including μέθοδος γενεθλιακῶν, ἐπιθαλαμίων, ἐπιταφίων κ.τ.λ.) he would, like Philodemus, regard as σοφιστικόν. Dionysius' lost treatise ὑπὲρ τῆς πολιτικῆς φιλοσοφίας (vide p. 7 supra) did not, therefore, deal with 'political philosophy' in our sense of the words, but with that civil and cultured oratory the practice of which befits the citizen of a free state: it was a defence of the philosophia civilis of Isocrates.—Writers unversed in the technical language of Greek rhetoric have sometimes made the strange mistake of taking κράτιστος δὴ πάντων τῶν πολιτικῶν λόγων ὁ Μενέξενος (de adm. vi dic. in Dem. c. 23) to mean "the Menexenus is far the best of all the political discourses (i.e. the Republic among others: cp. Thrasyllus' division) of Plato," instead of rendering "the Menexenus is claimed (sc. by some infatuated admirers of Plato) to be the finest specimen of civil oratory." Cp. Menex. (ad fin.) ἀλλ' ὅπως μου μὴ κατερεῖς, ἵνα καὶ αὐθὶς σοι πολλοὺς καὶ καλοὺς λόγους παρ' αὐτῆς πολιτικοὺς ἀπαγγέλλω.

πολύμορφος. ad Pomp. 122 16. Multiform, many-sided.

πολυτροπία. ad Amm. ii. 136 24. Variety.

πραγματικός. ad Pomp. 92 28, 102 4, 112 27, 116 11, 116 27 124 22, 126 12. Relating to subject-matter: opp. λεκτικός.

πρεπώδης. ad Pomp. 116 23. Becoming.

πρόθεσις. ad Amm. ii. 132 1, 132 8. Statement, proposition

προθετικός. ad Amm. ii. 134 14. Preposition: with μόριον.

προοίμιον. ad Amm. ii. 152 9. Introduction.

προσηγορία. ad Amm. ii. 144 21, 146 6, 134 5 (προσηγορικόν). Common noun, appellative.—For the history of the parts of speech, cp. Dionys. Hal. de Comp. c. 2, ταῦτα (στοιχεῖα) δὲ Θεοδέκτης μὲν καὶ Ἀριστοτέλης καὶ οἱ κατ' ἐκείνους φιλοσοφῆσαντες τοὺς χρόνους ἄχρι τριῶν προήγαγον, ὀνόματα καὶ ῥήματα καὶ συνδέσμους πρῶτα μέρη τῆς λέξεως ποιοῦντες. οἱ δὲ μετ' αὐτοὺς γενόμενοι, καὶ μάλιστα οἱ τῆς Στωϊκῆς αἵρέσεως ἡγεμόνες ἕως τεττάρων προυβίβασαν, χωρίσαντες ἀπὸ τῶν συνδέσμων τὰ ἄρθρα. εἴθ' οἱ μεταγενέστεροι τὰ προσηγορικά διελόντες ἀπὸ τῶν ὀνοματικῶν πέντε ἀπεφάναντο τὰ πρῶτα μέρη. ἕτεροι δὲ καὶ τὰς ἀντωνυμίας ἀποξεύσαντες ἀπὸ τῶν ὀνομάτων ἔκτον στοιχεῖον τοῦτο ἐποίησαν. οἱ δὲ καὶ τὰ ἐπιρρήματα διεῖλον ἀπὸ τῶν ῥημάτων καὶ τὰς προθέσεις ἀπὸ τῶν συνδέσμων καὶ τὰς μετοχὰς ἀπὸ τῶν προσηγορικῶν. Dionysius Thrax, Ars Grammatica, p. 23 Uhlig, τοῦ δὲ λόγον μέρη ἐστὶν ὀκτώ· ὄνομα, ῥῆμα, μετοχή, ἄρθρον, ἀντωνυμία, πρόθεσις, ἐπίρρημα, σύνδεσμος. ἡ γὰρ προσηγορία ὡς εἶδος τῷ ὀνόματι ὑποβέβληται. It would appear from these statements that ὄνομα might include προσηγορία, while προσηγορία could cover participles (μετοχαί) and adjectives (ἐπίθετα) as well as common nouns.—The history of Greek Grammar in ancient times is traced in Steintal's Geschichte der Sprachwissenschaft bei den Griechen und Römern.

πρόσωπον. ad Amm. ii. 134 17, 150 3. Person. Same sense as σῶμα 150 15.

πτῶσις. ad Amm. ii. 134 11, 146 7, 146 14. Case.

πυκνός. ad Pomp. 118 27, ad Amm. ii. 136 13. Terse.

ῥῆμα. ad Amm. ii. 134 3, 134 6, 146 21. Verb. So τὸ ῥηματικόν = verbal form, 134 2, and τὰ ῥηματικά μόρια τῆς λέξεως 138 17.

ῥητορική. ad Pomp. 96 10 etc. Rhetoric. See under φιλόσοφος, and under πολιτικός.

σαφήνεια. ad Pomp. 96 26. Perspicuity.

σαφής. ad Pomp. 118 3. Clear. [ἀσαφής = obscure: ad Pomp. 110 28.]

σημαῖνον. ad Amm. ii. 134 13 (τὸ σημαῖνον: τοῦ σημαίνοντος 134 12), 134 12 (τὸ σημαινόμενον), 148 16, 148 21. τὸ σημαῖνον = the expression: τὸ σημαινόμενον = the thing signified, the sense.

σημασία. ad Amm. ii. 136 12. Expression.

σημείον. ad Amm. i. 54 10: sign, indication. Cp. Aristot. Rhet. i. 2, 14 λέγεται γὰρ ἐνθυμήματα ἐξ εἰκότων καὶ σημείων. See also Under ἐνθύμημα p. 190 supra.

στριφνός. ad Amm. ii. 136 13. Firm, solid: the reference being to the close texture of the language of Thucydides. But it may be doubted whether in this and similar passages στριφνός is not the right reading. Cp. Jebb, Att. Or. i. 35: "He (sc. Dionysius in de Thucyd. c. 53) adds τὸ στριφνόν, which seems to be a metaphor of the same kind as αὐστηρόν, and to mean 'his biting flavour.'" See also de adm. vi dic. in Dem. c. 34, de Comp. c. 22.

στρογγύλος. ad Pomp. 118 27. Compact, rounded, terse. Lat. rotundus. Cp. de adm. vi dic. in Dem. c. 43 τῶν δὲ περιόδων αἱ μὲν εἰσιν εὐκόρυφοι καὶ στρογγύλαι ὥσπερ ἀπὸ τόρνου, ibid. c. 18 ἡ δ' ἐναγώνιος στρογγύλη τε εἶναι βούλεται καὶ συγκεκροτημένη καὶ μηδὲν ἔχουσα κολπῶδες: also ibid. c. 19, de Isocr. c. 2, de Lys. cc. 6, 13. Cic. de Fin. iv. 3, 7 "apte ac rotunde," Brut. 272 "verborum et delectus elegans et apta et quasi rotunda constructio." In Aristoph. Fragm. 397 the reference is to the style of Euripides: χρῶμαι γὰρ αὐτοῦ τοῦ στόματος τῷ στρογγύλῳ.

συγγραφεύς. ad Pomp. 106 27, 114 14, 114 17. Historian. Dionysius uses in the same sense ἀνὴρ ἱστορικός (ad Pomp. 110 4, 110 24) and λογογράφοι ('chroniclers,' or perhaps rather 'prose-writers,' de Comp. c. 16). συγγραφεύς is also used by Dionysius (e.g. de adm. vi dic. in Dem. c. 37, de Thucyd. c. 1) of a prose-writer, as distinguished from ποιητής. Cp. π. ὕψ. p. 207.

σύγκρισις. ad Pomp. 92 9, 92 18. Comparison. So συγκρίνων, ibid. 94 6.

συλλαβή. ad Pomp. 110 13. Syllable.

συλλογισμός. ad Amm. i. 64 1. Syllogism. See under ἐνθύμημα p. 190 supra.

συμβουλευτικός. ad Pomp. 120 25. Deliberative. With reference to the three γένη of rhetoric: συμβουλευτικόν, δικανικόν, ἐπιδεικτικόν.

συνπλοκή. ad Pomp. 126 8. Intertwining, blending: sc. τῶν φωνηέντων γραμμάτων. What Dionysius seems to mean is that there would have been more rugged force in the best passages of Theopompus if he had occasionally allowed the σύγκρουσις, or clashing, of vowels.

συναγωγή. ad Pomp. 122 9. Collection.

συνδετικός. ad Amm. ii. 134 14. Conjunction: with μόριον.

συνήθεια. ad Amm. ii. 146 5. Usage.

συνήθης. ad Pomp. 118 3. Customary, ordinary.

σύνταξις. ad Amm. i. 62 11. Treatise, work.

συντάσσεισθαι. ad Amm. i. 72 11, etc. To compose.

συντομία. ad Pomp. 114 6. Conciseness.

συστρέφειν. ad Pomp. 98 11. To compress.

σχῆμα. ad Pomp. 102 16, 120 4, 134 17. Figure. Jebb, Att. Or. i. 29, "these (the technical figures of rhetoric) have been well distinguished as 'figures of language' (σχήματα λέξεως) and 'figures of thought' (σχήματα διανοίας)—the first class including various forms of assonance and of artificial symmetry between clauses; the second including irony, abrupt pauses, feigned perplexity, rhetorical question and so forth. Caecilius of Calacte [was] the author of this distinction." ibid. ii. 64, n. 2, "Quintilian (ix. 3, § 2) subdivides the 'figures of language' as (1) grammatical—mere peculiarities of pathology or syntax, with no rhetorical purpose—e.g. the schema Pindaricum: (2) rhetorical—where a certain effect is meant to be wrought by the combination." ibid. p. 63, "a 'figure' (sc. as distinguished from a 'trope') is an affair of whole clauses or sentences." Cic. Brut. 69 "ornari orationem Graeci putant, si verborum immutationibus utantur, quos appellant τρόπους, et sententiarum orationisque formis quae vocant σχήματα."

σχηματίζειν. ad Pomp. 120 8, ad Amm. ii. 138 18, 140 3, 146 1, 146 6, 146 17, 152 19. To construct, compose. σχηματίζειν seems sometimes to cover the distribution and arrangement of all the elements of composition. λόγος ἐσχηματισμένος = oratio figurata, le discours figuré.

σχηματισμός. ad Pomp. 120 4, 126 10, ad Amm. ii. 132 20, 136 24, 148 11, 156 9. Construction, composition: l'emploi de tours de phrase. Cp. de Comp. c. 8 ἡ μὲν δὴ περὶ τὴν ἁρμογὴν τῶν κώλων θεωρία τοιαύτη· ἡ δὲ περὶ τὸν σχηματισμὸν ποδαπή; οὐκ ἔστιν εἰς τρόπον τῆς ἐκφορᾶς τῶν νοημάτων· ἀλλὰ τὰ μὲν ὡς ἀποφαινόμενοι λέγομεν, τὰ δὲ ὡς διαποροῦντες, τὰ δὲ ὡς πυνθανόμενοι, τὰ δὲ ὡς εὐχόμενοι, τὰ δὲ ὡς ἐπιτάττοντες, τὰ δὲ ὡς ὑποτιθέμενοι, τὰ δὲ ἄλλως πως σχηματίζοντες· οἷς ἀκολουθῶς καὶ τὴν λέξιν πειρώμεθα σχηματίζειν. πολλοὶ δὲ δήπου σχηματισμοὶ καὶ τῆς λέξεώς εἰσι, ὥσπερ καὶ τῆς διανοίας· οὓς οὐχ οἷόν τε κεφαλαιωδῶς περιλαβεῖν· ἴσως δὲ καὶ ἄπειροι, περὶ ὧν πολλὸς ὁ λόγος, καὶ βαθεῖα ἡ θεωρία. τέχνη. ad Amm. ii. 132 2. Manual of rhetoric. αἱ τέχναι, or αἱ ῥητορικαὶ τέχναι, is used specially of the Rhetoric of Aristotle: cp. ad Amm. i. 52 9, 54 1, 54 8, etc.; de Comp. c. 25 ἐν τῇ τρίτῃ Βύβλῳ τῶν ῥητορικῶν τεχνῶν).

τεχνικός. ad Amm. i. 70 10. Technical, skilful.

τόπος. ad Amm. i. 74 5, 80 17. Topic. The loci communes, or common-places of rhetoric; the general heads under which may be grouped arguments applicable to particular circumstances.

τραχύς. ad Amm. ii. 136 11.

τροπικός. ad Pomp. 98 15, 102 6, ad Amm. ii. 132 17. Tropical, figurative. For the strict meaning of 'trope,' see previous page, and further cp. Jebb Att. Or. ii. 59.

φιλόανθρωπος. ad Pomp. 96 22. Attractive, winning.

φιλόσοφος ῥητορική. ad Pomp. 96 9, 122 24. Philosophical, or scientific, rhetoric. The reference is to the old methodical Attic rhetoric (that of Isocrates especially), as distinguished from the later and purely empirical Asiatic rhetoric, to which Dionysius applies the epithet ἀμαθής (see p. 44 supra). For the wide sense of φιλοσοφία, cp. Jebb Att. Or. ii. 36 ff., 439, 444. Dionysius' high ideal of the training which the student of ἡ φιλόσοφος ῥητορική must undergo may be inferred from ad Pomp. 122 24.

φοβρός. ad Pomp. 116 4, ad Amm. ii. 136 14. Awe-inspiring-

φωνήεις. ad Pomp. 126 8. Vocal. τὰ φωνήεντα γράμματα = vowels

χαρακτήρ. ad Pomp. 96 12, 96 18, 96 20, 100 24, 114 3, 116 1, 118 15, 124 23, ad Amm. ii. 130 5, 130 16, 130 17, 132 13, 136 1, 156 11. Characteristic stamp. Cp. Cic. Orat. 36 "sed in omni difficillimum est formam, qui χαρακτήρ Graece dicitur, exponere optimi, quod aliud aliis videtur optimum," where Sandys annotates "the formal type of what is ideally the best, that on which the 'idea' of good is clearly stamped like the impression of a die on a coin. The usual Latin equivalent for χαρακτήρ in this sense is nota (46), but forma is here adopted in consequence of its having been already used in connexion with Cicero's application of the Platonic doctrine of ideas." See also ibid. 134, and Greilich op. cit. pp. 24—28.

χρῶμα. ad Amm. ii. 136 12. Colour. Ernesti op. cit. p. 384: "Dionysio in Ep. 2 ad Amm. cap. 2 p. 793 χρῶμα τῆς λέξεως dicitur is color, vel ea forma et ratio elocutionis, qua in sentiis imprimis vel severitas vel gravitas vel acerbitas vel vehementia aliave illius vis et indoles apparet: Colorit, Character des Ausdrucks in Rücksicht auf Sinn und Gedanken." Cp. Greilich op. cit. pp. 31—33.

ψυχαγωγία. ad Pomp. 122 21. Persuasion, gratification. Probably Dionysius recalls Plato's Phaedrus 261 A ἀρ' οὖν οὐ τὸ μὲν ὄλον ἡ ῥητορική ἂν εἴη τέχνη ψυχαγωγία τις διὰ λόγων κ.τ.λ., ibid. 355 C ἐπειδὴ λόγου δύναμις τυγχάνει ψυχαγωγία οὖσα, τὸν μέλλοντα ῥητορικὸν ἔσεσθαι ἀνάγκη εἶδέναι ψυχὴν ὅσα εἶδη ἔχει.

BIBLIOGRAPHY OF THE SCRIPTA RHETORICA.

It is hoped that the following bibliographical list, which has not been confined to the 'Three Literary Letters' but covers the rhetorical writings generally, will be found fairly complete by the student who uses it. With one or two unavoidable exceptions, the editor has consulted all the books and articles included in it. The literature of the subject is scattered and unusually difficult to control.

1546, 1547. EDITIO PRINCEPS.

The Ars Rhetorica, the De Comp. Verb., and Ep. ad Amm. II. were included in vol. i. of Aldus' Rhetores Graeci published at Venice in 1508. The Ep. ad Amm. II. had previously appeared in the Thucydides published by Aldus in 1502 and in that published in 1506 at Florence.—Later scholars occasionally incorporated Dionysius' essays on Lysias etc. in their editions of the Attic Orators. The essay on Isocrates had, indeed, become known in this way as early as 1493, when it was included in the Milan edition of Isocrates; the essay on Lysias became similarly known by means of the first volume of the Aldine edition of the Oratores Graeci (1513). The editio princeps of Robertus Stephanus includes the De Isocrate and the De Lysia, as well as the three works mentioned on its title-page.

Proem.*, of Ep. ad Amm. I., and of Ep. ad Pomp. The excerpts from the de Imit. also contained in it were, according to L. Cohn (Philologus xlix. p. 391) printed by H. Stephanus from a manuscript now in the Library of Trinity College, Cambridge (Gale Collection, O. 2. 12).

William Holwell (1726—1798) of Christ Church, Oxford, was proctor in 1758, vicar of Thornbury from 1762, and prebendary of Exeter from 1776. As his book, which contains some good emendations, is (with the possible exception of Hudson's edition of the collected works) the most considerable direct contribution made by English scholarship to the study of the Scripta Rhetorica of Dionysius, the following extract from his Address to the Reader may be found of interest: "Textum habes, uti spero, accuratum; pluribusque in locis emendatum; rationibus tamen fere semper allatis, quibus innixus, vel a Vulgata recessi, vel saltem recedendum putavi. Interpretationem quod attinet, ea quidem mendis scatet haud paucis, et nimis saepe Auctoris mentem perturbat, vel in contrarium torquet. Hanc suae editioni Oxon. inserendam curavit cl. Hudsonus, magnisque, quod miror, laudibus effert. Novam autem condere minime vacabat; sed et respuit Ingenium. Optimus interea sui ipsius Interpres Dionysius. Nonnulla tamen loca cum in Lexico, tum in Notis, magis ad Auctoris mentem forsitan explicata invenies, ne omnia, laboris fuga, intacta viderentur. Si qua autem in parte longior fuerim, aut nimis obvia quaedam annotaverim, scias velim, me haec, Studiosae Juventutis potissimum causa, publici juris fecisse."

Longinus on the Sublime. The Greek Text edited after the Paris Manuscript, with Introduction, Translation, Two Facsimiles, and Four Appendices (Textual, Linguistic, Literary, and Bibliographical). Cambridge University Press, 1899. Demy 8vo. 9s.

‘Der Verfasser hat sich durch mehrere Abhandlungen über das goldene Büchlein vom Erhabenen, die auch in dieser Wochenschrift (1898) besprochen worden sind, als trefflichen Kenner der Schrift und ihrer Eigentümlichkeiten eingeführt.....Die Lesarten des massgebenden Parisinus 2036 sind so getreu als möglich wiedergegeben, dazu auch zehn geringere Hss zurate gezogen und zwei Faksimiles der ersteren Hs beigelegt, sodass für den Kritiker schon wegen dieses Umstandes die englische Ausgabe neben jener Vahlens unentbehrlich sein wird. ... Dem kritischen Anhang überlegen ist die Erklärung sprachlicher Ausdrücke die eine feine Beobachtungsgabe verrät. Reichhaltige Indices, darunter ein wertvoller Index Graecitatis, machen den Schluss des sehr schön ausgestatteten Buches.’—Dr C. HAMMER (editor of Rhetores Graeci) in the Berliner Philologische Wochenschrift.

‘Der neue Herausgeber, Roberts, hat schon mehrere auf die Schrift bezügliche Arbeiten veröffentlicht, namentlich eine Studie über Cäcilius von Calacte und eine solche über den Verfasser der Schrift vom Erhabenen....Der Herausgeber giebt in den Anmerkungen genaue Rechenschaft über die Lesarten der Handschrift P 2036 und bespricht einzelne Stellen in einem textkritischen Anhang. Die Textbehandlung ist eine besonnene....Eine reichhaltige Bibliographie, Indices, eine umfassende Einleitung und eine den Text begleitende englische Uebersetzung erhöhen den Wert dieser sorgfältigen Ausgabe.’—Professor E. SCHÜRER in the Theologische Literaturzeitung.

‘Cette édition, due à un professeur qui s’est déjà beaucoup occupé du Περὶ Τύφους, est une vraie mine de renseignements sur ce traité. M. Roberts ne s’est pas contenté d’en publier le texte avec une traduction; il n’a négligé aucun point qui puisse en éclaircir la lecture et l’interprétation....Cette édition sera utile non seulement en Angleterre, mais aussi dans les autres pays.’—Professor MAURY in the Revue critique d’histoire et de littérature.

‘Nel complesso si può e si deve dire che il lavoro del Roberts fa onore all’ editore non solo ma alla filologia inglese.....Non abbiamo soltanto un’ edizione meritoria, ma una serie di buoni studi, sull’ autore edito, non soliti a trovarsi nelle edizioni.’—Professor C. O. ZURETTI in the Bollettino di Filologia Classica.

‘This book deserves a place in every classical library, both on account of the merits of the author and the excellence of the editing....The whole is good from end to end; the specialist and the general reader will alike find much that is of extraordinary interest....What Gibbon had to master by hard work, what stimulated that fine scholar, Charles James Fox, to pursue his study of Greek as a boy at Eton by the “intense pleasure” (p. 259) which he derived from it, is now made easy for all by the labour and ability of Professor Roberts. No man, for the future, can claim to be a critic, a scholar, or even a respectable classical student who does not know Longinus. His merit is too great to be obscured by temporary vicissitudes of taste, and his reputation will beyond doubt revive.’—Mr T. E. PAGE in the Bookman.

‘Though not free from flaws, the book is a valuable addition to English Classical literature, and deserves a place on the shelves of all scholars and humanists. They will find in it delight and stimulus. The volume is a fragment of a larger literary scheme, which has our heartiest sympathy, and for the execution of which Prof. Rhys Roberts shows himself highly qualified.’—Dr G. H. RENDALL in the Classical Review.

'With the single exception of Aristotle's 'Poetics,' the 'Treatise on the Sublime' has probably had more influence on criticism, both directly and indirectly, than any work in the world.....This edition will, we hope, become a text-book at the universities.....Dr Roberts's translation—and we speak after careful inspection of the versions of his predecessors, who are eleven in number—is incomparably the best which has appeared in English.....His Prolegomena are full of interest and value.'—Quarterly Review.

'In the introduction we find a full and judicious discussion of the vexed question of authorship.....Prof. Roberts's translation, also, is well done, being lucid as well as literal; and those who sympathize with Gibbon's complaint that "the Greek is, from the figurative style and bold metaphors, extremely difficult" will not fail to appreciate the present version.....The linguistic appendix contains some interesting details on the affinities of 'The Sublime' with Plato, Plutarch, and Philo, as well as a most useful glossary of rhetorical terms.'—Athenæum.

'Two generations have passed since the last English edition of Longinus appeared. Considering the merits of the book, and the almost idolatrous reverence shown to it during the seventeenth century, it is strange indeed that it should have fallen into the shade; and English scholars owe Mr Roberts a sincere gratitude for editing it again. A good deal of work has been spent on it by continental scholars in the last few years, and Mr Roberts has made use of this; but he has advanced a step further. Text, notes, and translation are his own; and in critical questions he shows a sober judgment which some foreign scholars would do well to imitate.'—Literature.

'This monumental edition of the famous treatise Περὶ Τύψους must surely go far to neutralize the 'recent neglect' of which Mr Roberts speaks in his introduction. For, apart from the inherent charm of the treatise itself—a charm which has made itself felt at all times and in all countries—we here have it embellished with all that the scholarship and taste of Mr Roberts can do for it in the way of appreciation and explanation. Greek scholar and English man of letters will alike welcome a great addition to their shelves.'—Journal of Education.

'This edition is in the first place a preliminary study for a 'History of Greek Literary Criticism' which Professor Rhys Roberts has for some years been preparing. But, apart from this, it is in itself a fine specimen of modern scientific scholarship.....Along with Professor Conway's Italic Dialects, it gives welcome proof that the establishment of professorships in the new university colleges is one of the most effective forms of the endowment of research.'—Manchester Guardian.

'It is no small credit to the translator that he has for the first time put into the hands of English readers a really adequate version of an author, who though, like Theocritus, born out of due time has yet been proclaimed a classic by the sure sentence of the whole world.'—Saturday Review.

'Oxford, which seems to have done most since 1636 for Longinus, would do well to prescribe the De Sublimitate for its school of English literature, and for the purpose a more complete, judicious, sympathetic, and scholarly edition than the one before us could hardly be desired.'—Speaker.

'The present edition is not only far more complete than its English predecessors, but also skilfully planned to serve either the scholar or the literary reader.....The textual and linguistic appendices are by no means the least valuable parts of this excellent edition.'—Guardian.

'We are, on every ground, most grateful to Professor Roberts for his extremely interesting and scholarly edition of this remarkable treatise.....We have nothing but praise for the work, which is as good as can be, and ought to prove a source of enlightenment, as well as interest, to that large majority of classical students to whom Longinus has hitherto been little more than a name.'—Churchman.

'Professor Roberts' previous work on the Ancient Boeotians won him much credit in America and on the Continent of Europe as well as at home. This new effort will add to his reputation. .... It bears witness to the extent and thoroughness of the writer's studies, his trained judgment, and his capacity for historical investigation and literary interpretation. .... The chapters on the authorship of the work and its contents and character are models of clear, cautious and convincing discussion.'—Critical Review.

'A translation of some kind is absolutely necessary for ordinary readers from the extreme difficulty of the language; and that of Professor Roberts is faithful and very often vivid. .... Much is to be learnt from his introduction and appendices, especially from the extremely interesting glossary of rhetorical terms. .... An admirable work of scholarship.'—Cambridge Review.

'Professor Roberts' book is a model of scholarship and completeness.'—Scotsman.

'An edition on the highest level of scholarship of one of the most remarkable books of the ancient world.'—Glasgow Herald.

'Il faut louer presque sans réserve la traduction, très exacte et d'une allure très aisée, ce qui, dans l'espèce, constitue presque un tour de force, tant la phrase du Pseudo-Longin est compliquée et pimentée.'—Revue des Études grecques.

'L'édition et la traduction du Traité du Sublime, attribué à Longin, que Monsieur Roberts donne au public savant et lettré, sont excellentes. .... M. Roberts n'a rien négligé pour rendre facile la lecture de ce texte aussi obscur qu'intéressant.'—Bulletin Critique.

'Cette édition se recommande par la correction du texte, la fidélité et l'élégance de la traduction, et par l'érudition déployée dans une foule de questions qui touchent à la grammaire et à la littérature. .... Le vocabulaire surtout est l'objet d'un examen délicat. .... Cet ouvrage, plein de science, de goût et de critique, sera une utile préparation pour tous ceux qui voudront aborder l'étude du traité Sur le Sublime.'—L'Université Catholique.
